Philadelphia World Heritage High School
Social Studies Lesson Plans
Here are select lesson plans from the Philadelphia World Heritage Lesson Plan Project that took place over the summer of 2016. Over a two-week period, Philadelphia educators collaborated with their peers to design lesson plans that focus on three areas: U.S. History, African American History, and World History. To frame the conversation, we asked educators to consider two questions: What has Philadelphia contributed to the world and, in return, how has the world contributed to Philadelphia? Some of these lessons have been incorporated as supplementary materials for high school social studies teachers serving within the School District of Philadelphia. This project provided the perfect impetus to challenge the knowledge that students take for granted and position them to engage in a steadily globalizing market. We are grateful to our participants and partners for empowering students to think critically about their communities and heritage as well as their role in the larger world. It is our hope that these lessons will inspire thoughtful conversations about history, humanity, and world perspective both in and outside of your classroom.

| Context            | Philadelphia was the first major city to mandate an African-American history graduation requirement. While many districts around the country require African-American history be infused in U.S. history courses, Philadelphia is the only major district that requires a full year of study. The fight for African-American studies in the district is a story that can provide insight for students on the value of having this course as well as the challenges of implementation.
This lesson would fit well at the beginning of an African-American history course because it gives context and perspective to the requirement (something that students often do not discuss when taking other required courses). Also, if the teacher intends to use various primary and secondary sources throughout the year, this lesson can introduce the practice to students and gives teachers a sense of where students are at with their historical thinking skills.
This lesson builds on Philadelphia's World Heritage Status by providing another example of how it's citizens push for building more tolerance and equity.
Essential Questions:
- Why does the School District of Philadelphia have a African-American history graduation requirement?
- Can a high school graduation requirement contribute to building a more tolerant and equitable society?  |
| Duration           | 4-5 Class Periods                                                                                                                                                                                          |

<td>I.</td>
<td>Students spend 5 minutes writing about their previous experiences learning African-American history? What did they learn? How did they learn it? What are questions that you have?</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
| A.              | NOTE: A potential extension activity for homework is for students to interview family members and friends about their experiences learning African-American II. Spend a few minutes discussing what students wrote. Have a scribe write down notes/a list on the board from what students share. Close this part of the conversation by asking students what they notice about what they shared. What are the similarities/differences in their experiences? What do they wonder or still want to know about African-American history and why?

PART TWO

III. Many students will have shared their experiences related to African-American History Month. If students do not, then ask students to speak about their experience. Build on this to lead a reflection on the purpose and impact of history and heritage months.

   A. Give students a list of official history and heritage in the United States. Review as a class or in small groups.
   B. Ask them what they notice and what they wonder.
   C. Talk about the difference between history and heritage. Merriam-Webster definitions are:
      1. Heritage: the traditions, achievements, beliefs, etc., that are part of the history of a group or nation
      2. History: an account of the past
   D. Why do we have history and heritage months?

PART THREE

IV. Transition to presenting students with the historical question: Acknowledge that it is clear that many of us already have experience with African-American history in schools, especially because of African-American History Month. So why does the School District of Philadelphia have an African-American history graduation requirement?

   A. Give some background information:
      1. Began as a requirement in 2005
      2. The first major city in the country to require it and one of the only districts to require it.

Instruction

I. Explain to students that a historical question requires strong evidence to answer and that they will be reading and analyzing various documents that provide first-hand and second-hand accounts.

II. Give students graphic organizers. Ask them to write their hypothesis to the historical question in the first box.

III. Give students a copy of the timeline

   A. Model the use of the timeline to identify national and local events that may help us understand the mandate.
Instruction

| I. | Introduce Document B
A. Students collaborate to read and answer the guiding questions
B. Answer clarifying questions as a class and/or review one or two questions. |
| II. | Introduce Document C: play the 5 min excerpt from the documentary “More than a Month”
B. Consider playing it twice. Second time students focus on answering guiding questions.
C. Students collaborate to discuss questions and their reactions to the video. |
| III. | Introduce Documents D-G: quotes from 5 articles reporting on the requirement
A. Hang the quotes around the room so that students can engage in a Gallery Walk.
B. Give students a certain amount of time to go around, discuss with classmates to write at least 3 arguments for each side of the graphic organizer. |

Independent Practice

</tr>
</thead>
| I. | Students spend time using evidence to answer the historical question in the graphic organizer:
A. Using evidence from all of the sources answer the historical question.Why does the School District of Philadelphia have an African American history graduation requirement?
1. NOTE: Teacher may want to provide more scaffolds (sentence starters) or may want to use this as a diagnostic assessment of student use of historical evidence.
B. Students compare and contrast their original hypothesis to their answer. |
| II. | Give students time to share answers. |
Closure

I. Read and discuss excerpts of The New Republic article as a class:
   A. What did the students she interviewed want? What were some of the positive reviews? What are the challenges for some teachers?
   B. Do you think that the article is representative of most Philly high schools?

II. Potential closing activities:
   A. Students write letters to themselves that they will get at the end of the year. Ask them to write of what they hope to get out of their African-American history course experience, what they want to know and the kind of student they want to be this year.

Assessment

- The graphic organizer including the written responses to the historical question will be the formative assessment which can also be used as a diagnostic tool for the evidence based writing.
- Class discussions will give the teacher a sense of how students are understanding sources.

Key Terms

- Heritage
- Corroboration
- Contextualizing
- Historical question

Resources and Materials

<td>Context</td>
<td>Philadelphia was a major center for the abolition movement. However, it was not a monolithic movement. The motivations, goals and strategies for abolition varied. One strategy employed was the boycotting of products made with slave labor organized. In Philadelphia, inspired by the work of an abolitionist in Baltimore, the first US organization dedicated to boycotting emerged, the Free Produce Society. While this strategy provided an opportunity for abolitionist to practice moral consistency, it did not reach the critical mass needed to put pressure on slaveholders. However, as a strategy, boycotting has persisted. In the case of modern day slavery, students may consider how they will make choices around the products they buy.</td>

| Anticipatory Set | 1. Warm-up: What is product or a brand that you are committed to and why? How does it make you feel? Does it connect you to other people? What value does it add to your life?
2. Have a discussion about their warm-up responses.
3. While discussion may have been light hearted up until this point, tell students that you will now shift the conversation to a topic that requires empathy for people that they do not know. Then ask students this follow-up question:
   a. What happens if you found out that parts of this product/brand uses slave labor?
   b. To give students more students more context (for some this may be the first time that they learn that slavery still exists in the world) provide them with the factsheet from the organization “Free the Slaves” - as they put it: “Slavery is not legal anywhere but it happens everywhere.” Review it together and allow for students to share their reactions.
   i. This is the link for the 2016 fact sheet: https://www.freetheslaves.net/wp-content/uploads/2016/03/FTS_factsheet-Updated2016.pdf |

   ii. Link: https://youtu.be/-ak1Hu8mmQw

d. OPTIONAL: Can do take the slavery footprint quiz as a class (teacher leads the class and come up with one answer) or if students have access to computers or ipads teacher may want to consider having each student do the quiz on their own or in pairs. At the end of the quiz, you will find out how many slaves around the world are working for you.
   i. Link to the quiz: http://slaveryfootprint.org/survey/#where_do_you_live

e. Follow-up discussion questions:
   i. Would you be willing to pay more (or your parents) for your products to ensure that it was not made using slave labor?
   ii. Would they be willing to boycott your favorite products/brands to send a message?
      1. As part of a boycott, you would could replace products. For example, instead of using a cell phone, you would use a landline.
   iii. How many of you feel torn? You don’t want anyone to be enslaved but you also don’t want to give up your cell phone or clothes?
      1. Explain to students that this is a feeling of moral inconsistency and that this doesn’t make them a bad person. But it does make them human and can help guide our actions.

Instruction

4. Explain to students that while the context was different we can learn from the abolition movement that contributed to the end of slavery in the United States. There were abolitionists in Philadelphia that also felt this moral inconsistency and decided to organize around boycotting to create change. Today we’re going to learn about their contributions to the abolition movement and also consider the lessons we can learn.
5. Give students background information to the abolition movement in Philadelphia up until the creation of the Free Produce Society.
   a. The first formal protest of slavery in the United States was made in 1688 in Germantown. It challenged the Society of Friends (Quakers) to denounce slavery. Philadelphia Quakers have had a long history of abolitionism.
   b. 1774: The Pennsylvania Abolition Society, the first anti-slavery society in the United States was created in Philadelphia.
   c. 1780: The Pennsylvania Gradual Abolition Act went into effect freeing anyone enslaved at the time at the age of 28.
   d. Philadelphia’s free black community grew in number and developed strong activism. They created their own anti-slavery societies and collaborated with Philadelphia’s white abolitionists.
   e. Most Philadelphians were not abolitionists. Many were active anti-abolitionists. Race riots and violence were common occurrences. An example is the burning of Pennsylvania Hall in May of 1838. It was built as an anti-slavery meeting house, stood completed for three days and was burned down by anti-abolitionists.
   f. NOTE: teacher may want to read the overview on abolitionism in Philadelphia in the Encyclopedia of Greater Philadelphia.
      i. Link: http://philadelphiaencyclopedia.org/archive/abolitionism/

6. Explain to students there were some Philadelphia abolitionists who felt strongly about the moral inconsistency of criticizing slavery and the slaveholders while buying products made by slaves. Out of this the Free Produce Society was born. Tell students that they’re going to read the group’s constitution. Review vocabulary:
   a. Free labor: labor/worker that is not enslaved. Does not mean “free of charge”.
   b. Conviction: a very strong belief
   c. Produce: In this context it means “products”
d. Society: in this context, a society is a group that comes together for a cause

e. Market: in this context, a market is the demand for a certain product (i.e. the market for cell phones is strong means that there is a lot of demand for cell phones).

f. Premise: the assumption or belief that an action is based on | Instruction | 7. Students read the Free Produce Society constitution and answer the guiding questions. NOTE: It may be helpful for students to discuss this in pairs/groups as the language used is dated.

|             | a. What are the four premises for the creation of this society?
|             | b. What does the group assume is the main factor driving slavery in the south?
|             | c. How will the FPS ensure that their strategy is successful in putting pressure on slaveholders?
| 8. Review the premises with students as a class |

| Instruction | 9. Students will read an anti-slavery pamphlets that advocated for boycotting. Each student gets one of the three distinct available pamphlets. Students answer guiding questions.

|             | a. Do you think that this strategy was successful?
|             | b. What would have been the challenges of this strategy? |

| Closure | 12. So, do boycotts work?
|         | a. Ask students: According to the Free Produce Society’s constitution, how would they know that their strategy worked?
|         | i. Answer: If slaveholders gave up their slaves and instead hired and paid laborers.

CONSTITUTION
OF PENNSYLVANIA.

Whereas there are many persons who, while they deplore the existence of Slavery, indirectly contribute to its support and continuance by using articles derived from the labor of Slaves:—And whereas we are satisfied that, by a proper union of reasonable efforts, articles similar to those which are thus produced, may be obtained by free labor:—And believing that the general use of such articles among us as are raised by Freemen, will gradually establish a conviction in the minds of those who hold their fellow-creatures in bondage, that their own interests would be promoted by the increased quantity, and more ready sale, of their produce, resulting from the change of the condition of their Slaves into that of hired Freemen:—

Therefore, — We whose names are hereunto subscribed do agree to form an Association under the title of The Free Produce Society Of Pennsylvania;
And have adopted the following Articles for our government, viz.:
Sect. II. The Committee shall correspond with such societies and individuals in the United States and elsewhere as may be considered favorable to the labor of Freemen, and to the consumption of their products, in order that a ready market may be opened for the sale of such produce, and the wants of the consumer, who will give it a preference, be supplied with facility and regularity.

Sect. III. The Committee shall occasionally circulate, through the medium of the public newspapers, or such other means as they may deem best, information of the places at which, and the persons to and from whom, the products of free labor can be sold and purchased on the most favorable terms. It shall also be a part of the duty of the Committee to exhibit, in a proper and reasonable manner, the propriety of giving a preference to the labor of Freemen, and the consistency of so doing by those who professedly deprecate the existence of Slavery.

"IF THERE WERE NO CONSUMERS OF SLAVE—PRODUCE THERE WOULD BE NO SLAVES."

Can we employ another in the commission of robbery, share the profits with him, and yet be innocent of the crime we induced him to commit, by the glittering bribe we offered for the commission?

It is clear to the comprehension of those who will take the trouble to examine the subject, that the northern merchant who purchases the cotton, sugar and rice of the southern planter—the proud and haughty planter, the task master who plies the gory lash to the lacerated back of the toiling slave, to extract the greatest possible amount of labor,—the auctioneer who cries his human wares in the market, and who sells these helpless victims of cupidity like oxen in the shambles; yea, even the heartless, murderous slave-trader, are each and all of them, only so many agents, employed by and for the consumer in extracting and transferring to him the products of the unrequited toil, of the poor down trodden suffering slave.

Let the consumer of slave produce ask himself, if he can advance a single argument in favour of his self-indulgence, which might not be offered with equal force by the slaveholder.

E. Harris, Printer.
Man’s right to liberty and the fruits of his own toil, is the inalienable gift of his Creator. We therefore charge upon the slaveholder the sin of robbing his brother of himself, and the products of his toil. “Wo unto him that buildeth his house by unrighteousness, & his chambers by wrong; that useth his neighbors services without wages, and giveth him not for his work.” We deny the oppressors right to the fruits of robbery, and by necessary consequence, his right, to sell them. Where, then, have we obtained the right to buy of that oppressor or his agents? On what principle do we deduce the right to become the receivers of goods, which we know to have been obtained by robbery and violence? On what principle do we infer, that we may innocently share “the gain of oppression?”

How great the inconsistency of those who profess to abhor the system of slavery, while they daily feed and clothe themselves with its fruits! Their words say to the oppressor, “spoil not the poor, oppress not the weak, enslave not the image of God;” their louder speaking conduct says, continue to extort that unrequited labor from your helpless victims: we will furnish you the means to carry on your system of robbery, since we can afford neither the cost, nor the inconvenience of obtaining free produce.
“From the toiling bondman's utter need,
Shall we pile our own full boards;
And fold about our forms the robes
His wasting life affords?

Put the worst face of iniquity and wrong upon "stolen goods" that they will bear, and it will show none of the deep red lineaments of sin, that marks the product of the slaves toil. If we demand in the name of justice that the slaveholder relinquish his hold on that which he wickedly calls his property, if we say to him; "honest poverty is better than ill gotten gain," shall we demur at the small inconvenience in which we shall be involved by an attempt to abstain from the products of unrequited toil? Can we doubt that a renunciation of the profits and comforts, which five hundred thousand American Abolitionists now derive from slavery, would do more to seal on the minds of slaveholders a conviction of the real iniquity of the system, and prepare them for a voluntary surrender of their portion of its emoluments, than all the arguments showing its abstract wrongfulness unaccompanied by the evidence that they proceed from honest hearts seeking to be clear of the wrong, & disdaining to derive advantage from it.

| Context             | During the Civil War, the free black community in Philadelphia, and in the Union, debated whether or not ‘colored’ troops should serve as soldiers in the Union army. This debate went on even though the federal government held it illegal for black men to serve. In this lesson, students will read primary sources from both sides of the debate and then engage in a mock historical debate that uses the arguments identified in primary sources. The free black community in Philadelphia was a center for thought around freedom, equality and patriotism. The following essential questions relating to patriotism and identity highlight the global connections to the historical moment that is the focus of this lesson. Essential Questions:
  - What is patriotism? What purpose does it serve?
  - How does identity interact with patriotism?
  - Should free African-Americans join the Union army? |
| Duration            | 2-4 class periods                                                                                                                                                                                           |
| Objective           | SWBAT identify arguments in a primary source
IOT participate in a structured debate.
SWBAT listen to their classmates and take notes on their debate points
IOT write a response a debate question. |
| Standards           | CCSS.ELA-Literacy.RH.9-10.1
Cite specific textual evidence to support analysis of primary and secondary sources, attending to such features as the date and origin of the information.
CCSS.ELA-Literacy.RH.9-10.2
Determine the central ideas or information of a primary or secondary | source; provide an accurate summary of how key events or ideas develop over the course of the text.

CCSS.ELA-Literacy.RH.9-10.6

Compare the point of view of two or more authors for how they treat the same or similar topics, including which details they include and emphasize in their respective accounts.

8.1.U.C. Analyze, synthesize and integrate historical data, creating a product that supports and appropriately illustrates inferences and conclusions drawn from research. (Reference RWSL Standard 1.8.11 Research)

8.2.U.A. Evaluate the role groups and individuals from Pennsylvania played in the social, political, cultural, and economic development of the U.S.

8.2.U.B. Evaluate the importance of various historical documents, artifacts, and places in Pennsylvania which are critical to U.S.

8.2.U.D. Evaluate how conflict and cooperation among groups and organizations in Pennsylvania have influenced the growth and development of the U.S. Ethnicity and race Working conditions, Immigration, Military conflict, Economic stability.

Anticipatory Set

| I. | Warm-up: What does it mean to be patriotic? To what extent is patriotism necessary? Make a long list of ways that a person can be patriotic. |
| II. | Discuss warm-up. |
| III. | To transition, focus joining the army as a form of patriotism. What are reasons that someone joins the army? |
| IV. | Transition: explain to students that we will be looking at the debate about whether or not free African-Americans in Union states should serve in the army. |

Instruction

| V. | Develop student background information on soldiers in the Civil War |
| A. | Explain to students that the Union and state armies refused to accept northern black volunteers up until the Emancipation Proclamation in 1863, almost three years after the start of the war. Although, the U.S Navy had accepted black men to serve. |
| B. | Give students an overview of Civil War statistics (Appendix A): https://drive.google.com/open?id=0B7gJ1NgAMW15RjxMkU3aDlizG8 |

Independent Practice

XIII. Students write a response to the debate question: Should free African Americans join the Union army?

Closure

XIV. As a class, reflect on the following:

- Strengths and areas of improvement for discussion.
- How does identity impact patriotism? What did it mean to patriotic for free African-Americans during the Civil War?

Assessment

- Graphic organizer for analysis of documents and debate preparation
- Performance in debate
- Written response to the question: Should free African-Americans join the Union army?

Key Terms

- Patriotism
- Civil War: Union and Confederacy
- Regiment
- Colored: (to help students understand the primary source language) in the United States, an accepted term used to refer to non-white people that came out of the Civil War era; however, today it is usually considered offensive.

MEN OF COLOR:

At length the opportunity is offered for which you have waited so long and so patiently. A gigantic contest, in which the interests of your race are so largely involved, threatens with destruction the land which for centuries has been your home. At the very commencement of the struggle, you eagerly offered your services. They were rejected for reasons which, whether well or ill founded, were all powerful at the time. Those reasons exist no longer, and your country now invites you to arms in her defence.

Men of color, we speak to you of your country, of the land where God in his mysterious providence has placed you to work out His inscrutable purposes. Yet you have been strangers in a land of strangers, and it is now for you to decide whether that land shall be to you and your children more in the future than it has been in the past. We can make no promises; but we have an abiding faith that the Almighty has not visited us with tribulation in wrath, but in mercy; that you and we, thus tried in the fiery furnace, if true to ourselves and to Him, shall emerge purified and redeemed from the sins and the wrongs of the past.

Twice herefore have you displayed your valor in the defence of the Republic. In two wars with Great Britain your strong arms aided to beat back the foe, and Washington and Jackson acknowledged the services which you so willingly rendered. You failed in your reward then, but circumstances now have changed, and a war in which slavery on one side is arrayed against freedom on the other, cannot leave you in your present condition, if only you show yourselves equal to the occasion. Old prejudice declared that you could not fight. Your brethren in Louisiana and Mississippi, though degraded by ages of servitude, have gloriously replied to that taunt. You who have long been free are now called upon to respond to them. Prejudice still sneeringly asserts that you will not leave your homes to fight for the flag of the white man. It is for you to repel that taunt, and to show yourselves worthy to call that flag likewise your own.

It is true that even as soldiers, with equality of hardship and of danger, there is even yet inequality of reward. Your pay is not that of the white man, and you are offered no bounty by the Government. This, rightly considered, should be to you a fresh incentive. If, a year ago, this was all that could be secured by your friends, at a time when colored enlistments had rather to be suggested than openly advocated, it is for you to dispel the remaining mist of prejudice by showing in your sacrifices that you are actuated, not by love of gain, but by the promptings of patriotism; that you are capable of noble ambition, and that no longer as a servile race, but as the soldiers of a free Republic, your deeds may prove that the laborer is worthy of his hire. We feel authorized to assure you that the Administration and a powerful portion of Congress will at the next session use their influence to remove such discrimination as to pay, not only in the future, but to make up to you all arrearages. Another Port Hudson fight will carry Congress by storm. Meanwhile our exertions shall be unremitting to raise funds, which, if they exceed what may be requisite for the necessary expenditures of enlistments and organization shall be devoted to your benefit.

The world will look with interest upon the mighty experiment in which we are engaged, in which a down trodden race is invited to prove its manhood. The nation is too deeply solicitous in the success of the experiment to neglect any means requisite for that success. You may therefore rely on the most careful forethought and attention. Your officers will be tried and experienced men, selected for the purpose by a special board of examiners, that you may not be carried into battle by incompetent leaders. Every opportunity will be afforded you that skill and science can suggest, and the destinies of your race will be left in your hands, to rise or to fall as you may approve yourselves.

An opportunity which has no parallel in history is now before you. Shrink from it now, and you justify the taunts and sneers of your enemies and oppressors. Take advantage of it; show yourselves to be men and patriots, and a grateful country watching the flags of your regiments emerging triumphantly from the smoke of battle, cannot refuse the applause which is the due of valor contending for the right.

APPENDIX F

Speech by Frederick Douglass, "Men of Color, to Arms!" (1863)

For the first two years of the Civil War black and white abolitionists urged both the liberation of the slaves and the recruitment of African American men in defense of the Union. Barely three months after Lincoln's Emancipation Proclamation went into effect, Frederick Douglass gave a speech in Rochester, New York on March 2, 1863, titled "Men of Color, To Arms!" which urged African American men to join what was increasingly a war to make real what the Proclamation only promised—complete freedom.

When first the rebel cannon shattered the walls of Sumter and drove away its starving garrison, I predicted that the war then and there inaugurated would not be fought out entirely by white men. Every month's experience during these dreary years has confirmed that opinion. A war undertaken and brazenly carried on for the perpetual enslavement of colored men, calls logically and loudly for colored men to help suppress it. Only a moderate share of sagacity was needed to see that the arm of the slave was the best defense against the arm of the slaveholder. Hence with every reverse to the national arms, with every exulting shout of victory raised by the slaveholding rebels, I have implored the imperiled nation to unchain against her foes, her powerful black hand. Slowly and reluctantly that appeal is beginning to be heeded. Stop not now to complain that it was not heeded sooner. It may or it may not have been best that it should not. This is not the time to discuss that question. Leave it to the future. When the war is over, the country is saved, peace is established, and the black man's rights are secured, as they will be, history with an impartial hand will dispose of that and sundry other questions. Action! Action! not criticism is the plain duty of this hour. Words are now useful only as they stimulate to blows. The office of speech now is only to point out when, where, and how to strike to the best advantage. There is no time to delay. The tide is at its flood that leads on to fortune. From East to West, from North to South, the sky is written all over, "Now or never."

Liberty won by white men would lose half its luster. "Who would be free themselves must strike the blow." "Better even die free, than to live slaves." This is the sentiment of every brave colored man amongst us. There are weak and cowardly men in all nations. We have them amongst us. They tell you this is the "white man's war"; that you will be no "better off after than before the war;" that the getting of you into the army is to "sacrifice you on the first opportunity." Believe them not; cowards themselves, they do not wish to have their cowardice shamed by your brave example. Leave them to their timidity, or to whatever motive may hold them back. I have not their timidity, or to whatever motive may hold them back. I have not thought lightly of the words I am now addressing you. The counsel I give comes of close observation of the great struggle now in progress, and of the deep conviction that this is your hour and mine. In good earnest then, and after the best deliberation, I now for the first time during this war feel at liberty to call and counsel you to arms. By every consideration which binds you to your enslaved fellow countrymen, and the peace and welfare of your country; by every aspiration which you cherish for the freedom and equality of yourselves and your children; by all the ties of blood and identity which make us one with the brave black men now fighting our battles in Louisiana and in South Carolina, I urge you to fly to arms, and smite with death the power that would bury the government and your liberty in the same hopeless grave. I wish I could tell you that the State of New York calls you to this high honor. For the moment her constituted authorities are silent on the subject. They will speak by and by, and doubtless on the right side; but we are not compelled to wait for her. We can get at the throat of treason and slavery through the State of Massachusetts. She was first in the War of Independence; first to break the chains of her slaves; first to make the black man equal before the law; first to admit colored children to her common schools, and she was first to answer with her blood the alarm cry of the nation, when its capital was menaced by rebels. You know her patriotic governor, and you know Charles Summer. I need not add more.

Massachusetts now welcomes you to arms as soldiers. She has but a small colored population from which to recruit. She has full leave of the general government to send one regiment to the war, and she has undertaken to do it. Go quickly and help fill up the first colored regiment from the North. I am authorized to assure you that you will receive the same wages, the same rations, the same equipments, the same protection, the same treatment, and the same bounty, secured to the white soldiers. You will be led by able and skillful officers, men who will take special pride in your efficiency and success. They will be quick to accord to you all the honor you shall merit by your valor, and see that your rights and feelings are respected by other soldiers. I have assured myself on these points, and can speak with authority. More than twenty years of unswerving devotion to our common cause may give me some humble claim to be trusted at this momentous crisis. I will not argue. To do so implies hesitation and doubt, and you do not hesitate. You do not doubt. The day dawns; the morning star is bright upon the horizon! The iron gate of our prison stands half open. One gallant rush from the North will fling it wide open, while four millions of our brothers and sisters shall march out into liberty. The chance is now given you to end in a day the bondage of centuries, and to rise in one bound from social degradation to the plane of common equality with all other varieties of men. Remember Denmark Vesey of Charleston; remember Nathaniel Turner of Southampton; remember Shields Green and Copeland, who followed noble John Brown, and fell as glorious martyrs for the cause of the slave. Remember that in a contest with oppression, the Almighty has no attribute which can take sides with oppressors. The case is before you. This is our golden opportunity. Let us accept it, and forever wipe out the dark reproaches unsparingly hurled against us by our enemies. Let us win for ourselves the gratitude of our country, and the best blessings of our posterity through all time. The nucleus of this first regiment is now in camp at Readville, a short distance from Boston. I will undertake to forward to Boston all persons adjudged fit to be mustered into the regiment who shall apply to me at any time within the next two weeks.

LETTERS AND DISCUSSIONS ON THE FORMATION OF COLORED REGIMENTS, AND THE DUTY OF THE COLORED PEOPLE IN REGARD TO THE GREAT SLAVEHOLDERS' REBELLION, in the
UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

BY ALFRED M. GREEN.

PHILADELPHIA:
RINGWALT & BROWN, STEAM PRESS
311 SOUTH FOURTH STREET
1862.
THE COLORED

PHILADELPHIANS FORMING REGIMENTS.

From the Philadelphia Press, of April 22, 1861.

A number of prominent colored men are now raising two regiments at the Masonic Hall, in South Eleventh street, and hundreds of brawny ebony men are ready to fill up the ranks if the State will accept their services. Peril and war blot out all distinction of race and rank. These colored soldiers should be attached to the Home Guard. They will make Herculean defenders. Colored men, it will be remembered, fought the glorious battle of Red Bank, when the city was in peril in 1777. The following is the address:

The time has arrived in the history of the great Republic when we may again give evidence to the world of the bravery and patriotism of a race, in whose hearts burns the love of country, of freedom, and of civil and religious toleration. It is these grand principles that enable men, however proscribed, when possessed of true patriotism, to say: "My country, right or wrong, I love thee still!"

It is true, the brave deeds of our fathers, sworn and subscribed to by the immortal Washington of the Revolution of 1776, and of Jackson and others, in the War of 1812, have failed to bring us into recognition as citizens, enjoying those rights so dearly bought by those noble and patriotic sires.

It is true, that our injuries in many respects are great; fugitive-shear laws, Dred Scott decisions, indictments for treason, and long and dreary months of imprisonment. The result of the most unfair rules of judicial investigation has been the pay we have received for our solicitude, sympathy, and aid in the dangers and difficulties of those "days that tried men's souls."

Our duty, brethren, is not to cavil over past grievances. Let us not be derelict to duty in the time of need. While we remember the past, and regret that our present position in the country is not such as to create within us that burning zeal and enthusiasm for the field of battle, which inspires other men in the full enjoyment of every civil and religious emolument, yet let us endeavor to hope for the future, and improve the present auspicious moment for creating anew our claims upon the justice and honor of the Republic; and, above all, let not the honor and glory achieved by our fathers be blasted or sullied by a want of true heroism among their sons. Let us, then, take up the sword, trusting in God, who will defend the right, remembering that these are other days than those of yore—that the world to-day is on the side of freedom and universal political equality.

That the war-cry of the howling leaders of Secession and treasion is, let us drive back the advance guard of civil and religious freedom; let us have more slave territory; let us build stronger the tyrant system of slavery in the great American Republic.
Remember, too, that your very presence among the troops of the North would inspire your oppressed brethren of the South with zeal for the overthrow of the tyrant system, and confidence in the armies of the living God—the God of truth, justice, and equality to all men.

With a knowledge of your zeal and patriotism, and a hope of its early development, I am yours, for God and humanity,

A. M. GREEN.

PHILADELPHIA, April 20, 1861.
In my last, I left off by introducing an analogy between our condition and that of four persons living as neighbors in the same vicinity. A, who hates me always, is a slaveholder. B, who is influenced so much by A, is the government. C, who I represented as our friend, is the liberal, true-hearted anti-slavery man of the country, who seeks by any and every means, to emancipate the slaves and enfranchise the already freed man. D, is the colored people, North and South; of course, we’ve all but one interest in this matter, at least. A and B are already in deadly combat. C has a manifest disposition to lend B a hand, for he has often expostulated with B about his allowing A so much influence and power in controlling his affairs, especially on this very subject which has created the quarrel. Of course, if they are not enough for A, D can do nothing less than come in for his share of the responsibility. In a word, if the government and the straight-out anti-slavery men of the North cannot settle satisfactorily with the slaveholders, we are ready to give them such a helping hand as will be felt by Southern chivalry to their heart’s content. If the government is not willing to endorse our project till it is reduced to an extremity, it may by such a course advance our interests the more. At all events, hundreds of the noble sons of the old Keystone State are coming into the ranks of our regiments now being organized, and going through with the regular drill and school of the soldier, knowing that the day is not far distant when duty will demand efficient service at their hands, in behalf of the slave. Whether government sanctions it or not, God will.

Respectfully yours,

A. M. GREEN.

MR. EDITOR:

The duty of the black man at this critical epoch is a question of much importance, deeply interesting the friends of liberty, both white and black. The most imposing feature of this duty, I am told, is in relation to military organizations. This question, I am told, is forced upon us by our eminent, educated, far-sighted leaders, who, anxious for our elevation and zealous for our reputation, in connection with our white brothers would have us write our names side by side with them upon the immortal book of fame, won by well-contested and desperate encounters upon the battle-field. Claiming that any omission on our part to exhibit that patriotism so noticeable in the whites, will, when history shall record the doings of this memorable country, leave our names without one deed of patriotism or expressed desire for the success of the cause of liberty; not one laurel to entwine the brows of those whose valor like blazing stars upon the battle-field would, no doubt, have eclipsed those whom we now are satisfied to acknowledge as superiors and protectors. Is this all wisdom, this mode of reasoning; or is it a mistaken idea, called into existence by a desire for fame? Is it a demanding necessity that the world will decide belongs to us to meet, thus to prove our manhood and love of liberty? Have not two centuries of cruel and unrequited servitude in this country, alone entitled the children of this generation to the rights of men and citizens? Have we not done our share towards creating a national existence for those who now enjoy it to our degradation, ever devising evil for our suffering, heart-crushed race?

Who that will carefully note the many historical reminiscences, made mention of by those who are ready to do justice to us, can doubt our bravery? Who that has heard of the many privations, hair-breadth escapes, and the unflinching determination of our enslaved brethren seeking the free shores of Canada, can doubt our love of liberty? True patriotism does not consist in words alone, neither do patriotic demonstrations always contribute to the end alone, independent of material aid. I do not suppose any people have been taxed heavier or more than the poor colored people for the cause of liberty, with such small results to themselves. Now, if we have contributed our share to support and establish a government, that we are not entitled to a share in the benefits thereof, what becomes our duty when that government is menaced by those they have cherished at the expense of our blood, toil and degradation?

Let your own heart answer this question, and no regiments of black troops will leave their bodies to rot upon the battle-field beneath a Southern sun—to conquer a peace based upon the perpetuity of human bondage—stimulating and encouraging the inveterate prejudice that now bars our progress in the scale of elevation and education.

I claim that the raising of black regiments for the war would be highly impolitic and uncalculated for under the present state of affairs, knowing, as we do, the policy of the Government in relation to colored men. It would show our incompetency to comprehend the nature of the differences existing between the two sections now at variance, by lending our aid to either party. By taking such measures we invite injustice at the hands of those we prefer to serve; we would contribute to the African colonization scheme, projected a half century ago, by ridding the country of that element so dangerous to the charming institution of negro slavery.

Entertaining the sentiment and determination that they do, would it not be unjust in them to accept our service? Would we still invite them to cap the climax by forcing us to the cannon’s mouth to save the destruction of those whose whole existence should be merged in with their country’s weal and woe? That death should be the readiest sacrifice patriotic citizens could offer to uphold the people’s hope, the people’s palladium, no one should deny. But what do we enjoy, that should inspire us with those feelings towards a government that would sooner consign five millions of human beings to never-ending slavery than wrong one slave master of his human property? Does not the contemplation of so flagrant a wrong cause your blood to boil with Christian indignation, or bring tears to the eyes of your broken-hearted old men, whose heads, now silvered by time or bleached by sorrow, can no longer shoulder the weightier responsibilities of a young man's calling?
Not only that. Any public demonstration (for this could not well be done in a corner) would only embarrass the present administration, by stirring up old party prejudices which would cause the loss of both sympathy and treasure, which the government cannot well afford to lose at present. By weakening the arm of the government, we strengthen that of the slave power, who would soon march through these States without fear of forcible resistance.
It would be contrary to Christian humanity to permit so flagrant an outrage in silence to be perpetrated upon any people, especially a class who have known naught else but wrong at their hands, whom they would so gloriously serve in time of danger to their own liberties and sacred rights, preferring now their services to uphold a Government leagued with perdition, upon which the doom of death is written, unless they repent, in letters so plain that he who runs may read. Let us weigh well this thing before taking steps which will not only prove disastrous to the cause we would help, but bring suffering and sorrows upon those left to mourn unavailingly our loss.
I maintain that the principle of neutrality is the only safe one to govern us at this time. When men's lives are in their hands, and so little inducement as there is for us to cast ourselves into the breach, our work for the present lies in quite a different channel from assuming war responsibilities uninvited, with no promised future in store for us—a dilemma inviting enmity and destruction to the few, both North and South, among our people, enjoying partial freedom.
The slave's only hope—his only help—is his suffering brother at the North. When we are removed, the beacon light which directs and assists the panting fugitive is darkened and obscured—his once bright hope, that gave comfort to him as he pressed on to liberty's goal, is shadowed o'er forever. Our own precipitous, unwise zeal must never be the cause to stay the car of freedom, but ever let it roll onward and upward until earth and heaven united shall become one garden of paradisal freedom, knowing no color, no clime, but all one people, one language, one Father, Almighty God.

Once under army discipline, subject to the control of government officers or military leaders, could we dictate when and where the blow should be struck? Could we enter upon Quixotic crusades of our own projecting, independent of the constituted authorities, or these military chiefs? Will the satisfaction of again hearing a casual mention of our heroic deeds upon the field of battle, by our own children, doomed for all that we know to the same inveterate, heart-crushing prejudice that we have come up under, and die leaving as a legacy unto our issue—all from those for whom you would so unwittingly face the cannon’s mouth to secure to them a heritage denied you and yours?

Is this country ready and anxious to initiate a new era for downtrodden humanity, that you now so eagerly propose to make the sacrifice of thousands of our ablest men to encourage and facilitate the great work of regeneration? No! no!! Your answer must be: No!! No black regiments, unless by circumstances over which we have no option, no control; no initiatory war measures, to be adopted or encouraged by us. Our policy must be neutral, ever praying for the success of that party determined to initiate first the policy of justice and equal rights.

Who can say that in another twelve months’ time the policy of the South will not change in our favor, if the assistance of England or France will by it be gained, rather than submit to northern dictation or subjugation? Did that idea ever suggest itself to your mind? Strange things happen all the while. Look back for the last twenty-four months, and ask yourself if you could have foretold what to-day you are so well informed has actually transpired when coming events cast their shadows before?

In these days, principle is supplanted by policy, and interest shapes policy, I find by daily observation, both in high and low places. Although to many the above idea may seem idle and delusory, inconsistent with the present spirit and suicidal policy of the South, yet I for one would feel justified in entertaining it equally with the idea that the North would proclaim a general emancipation so long as she supposed it a possibility to reclaim the disaffected States of the Southern Confederacy.
And, if an impossibility, what would all proclamations to that effect avail?

I believe with the act of emancipation adopted and proclaimed by the South, both England and France, (and in fact I might safely say all Europe,) would not only recognize their independence, but would render them indirectly material aid and sympathy.

To get the start of the northern slave-worshippers, as they are sometimes termed, who can say that, as a last resort, these rebel leaders have not had that long in contemplation, knowing that should they succumb to this government through force of circumstances, or the uncertain chances of war, their lives would be valueless only as a warning to future generations.

Then, why may we not hope that such is their ultimatum in case of a series of defeats—the liberation of four millions of our poor, heart-crushed, enslaved race. One or two large battles will decide the future policy of both the contending parties—the sooner it comes the sooner we will know our fate. It is in that scale it hangs.

Then let us do our duty to each other—use care in all our public measures—be not too precipitous, but in prayer wait and watch the salvation of God.

“We Feel as Though Our Country Spurned Us”: Soldier James Henry Gooding Protests Unequal Pay for Black Soldiers, 1863

In January, 1863—the month of Lincoln’s Emancipation Proclamation and the second year of the Civil War—the United States began allowing black soldiers to enlist in the Union army. The army needed more manpower or, as African-American soldier James Henry Gooding put it with bitter eloquence, “more food for its ravenous maw.” By 1865 approximately one tenth of all Union soldiers and sailors were African-American, and about eighty percent of these came from the slave states. Black soldiers fought with notable valor. When captured they faced much greater brutality from Confederate soldiers than did their white comrades. Union service, however, was no guarantee of equal treatment. Black soldiers in the Union army served in segregated troops, often faced menial assignments, and received lower pay—$10 per month to white soldiers’ $13. In this letter to President Lincoln, Gooding, writing on behalf of himself and his fellow black soldiers, protested these conditions.

Morris Island, S.C.

Your Excellency, Abraham Lincoln:

Your Excellency will pardon the presumption of an humble individual like myself, in addressing you, but the earnest solicitation of my comrades in arms besides the genuine interest felt by myself in the matter is my excuse, for placing before the Executive head of the Nation our Common Grievance.

On the 6th of the last Month, the Paymaster of the Department informed us, that if we would decide to receive the sum of $10 (ten dollars) per month, he would come and pay us that sum, but that, on the sitting of Congress, the Regt. [regiment] would, in his opinion, be allowed the other 3 (three). He did not give us any guarantee that this would be, as he hoped; certainly he had no authority for making any such guarantee, and we cannot suppose him acting in any way interested.

Now the main question is, are we Soldiers, or are we Laborers? We are fully armed, and equipped, have done all the various duties pertaining to a Soldier’s life, have conducted ourselves to the complete satisfaction of General Officers, who were, if anything, prejudiced against us, but who now accord us all the encouragement and honors due us; have shared the perils and labor of reducing the first stronghold that flaunted a Traitor Flag; and more, Mr. President, today the Anglo Saxon Mother, Wife, or Sister are not alone in tears for departed Sons, Husbands, and Brothers. The patient, trusting descendant of Africa’s Clime have dyed the ground with blood, in defence of the Union, and Democracy. Men, too, your Excellency, who know in a measure the cruelties of the iron heel of oppression, which in years gone by, the very power their blood is now being spilled to maintain, ever ground them in the dust. But when the war trumpet sounded o’er the land, when men knew not the Friend from the Traitor, the black man laid his life at the altar of the Nation,—and he was refused. When the arms of the Union were beaten, in the first year of the war, and the Executive called for more food for its ravenous maw, again the black man begged the privilege of aiding his country in her need, to be again refused.

And now he is in the War, and how has he conducted himself? Let their dusky forms rise up, out of the mires of James Island, and give the answer. Let the rich mould around Wagner’s parapet be upturned, and there will be found an eloquent answer. Obedient and patient and solid as a wall are they. All we lack is a paler hue and a better acquaintance with the alphabet. Now your Excellency, we have done a Soldier’s duty. Why can’t we have a Soldier’s pay? You caution the Rebel chieftain, that the United States knows no distinction in her soldiers. She insists on having all her soldiers of whatever creed or color, to be treated according to the usages of War. Now if the United States exacts uniformity of treatment of her soldiers from the insurgents, would it not be well and consistent to set the example herself by paying all her soldiers alike?

We of this Regt. were not enlisted under any “contraband” act. But we do not wish to be understood as rating our service of more value to the Government than the service of the ex-slave. Their service is undoubtedly worth much to the Nation, but Congress made express provision touching their case, as slaves freed by military necessity, and assuming the Government to be their temporary Guardian. Not so with us. Freemen by birth and consequently having the advantage of thinking and acting for ourselves so far as the Laws would allow us, we do not consider ourselves fit subjects for the Contraband act.

We appeal to you, Sir, as the Executive of the Nation, to have us justly dealt with. The Regt. do pray that they be assured their service will be fairly appreciated by paying them as American Soldiers, not as menial hirings. Black men, you may well know, are poor; three dollars per month, for a year, will supply their needy wives and little ones with fuel. If you, as Chief Magistrate of the Nation, will assure us of our whole pay, we are content. Our Patriotism, our enthusiasm will have a new impetus, to exert our energy more and more to aid our Country. Not that our hearts ever flagged in devotion, spite the evident apathy displayed in our behalf, but we feel as though our country spurned us, now we are sworn to serve her. Please give this a moment’s attention.

APPENDIX J

Letter by the Mother of a Black Soldier (1863)

Within the Union army, black soldiers were anything but equal to white. Serving in segregated units and ineligible, until the end of the war, to rise to the rank of commissioned officers, they were initially paid less than white soldiers. Even more alarming, the Confederacy announced that it would treat captured soldiers not as prisoners of war but as fugitives who would be remanded to slavery.

One of the more remarkable letters of the Civil War era was written to President Lincoln by Hannah Johnson, the mother of a black soldier. Although, as she notes, she had enjoyed but a “poor education,” Mrs. Johnson eloquently advised the president to insist that black prisoners be treated the same as white and resist pressures to rescind the Emancipation Proclamation. The fact that she felt she had a sympathetic recipient in the White House illustrates the enormous changes American society was undergoing as a result of the Civil War. Mrs. Johnson did not know that the day before she wrote the letter, Lincoln had ordered that, for every captured black soldier enslaved, a Confederate prisoner would be put to hard labor for the duration of the war.

Buffalo [New York] July 31 1863

Excellent Sir My good friend says I must write to you and she will send it My son went in the 54th regiment I am a colored woman and my son was strong and able as any to fight for his country and the colored people have as much to fight for as any. My father was a Slave and escaped from Louisiana before I was born forty years ago I have but poor education but I never went to school but I know just as well as any what is right between man and man. Now I know it is right that a colored man should go and fight for his country, and so ought to a white man. I know that a colored man ought to run no greater riesues than a white, his pay is no greater his obligation to fight is the same. So why should not our enemies be compelled to treat him the same, Made to do it.

My son fought at Fort Wagner but thank God he was not taken prisoner, as many were I thought of this thing before I let my boy go but then they said M. Lincoln will never let them sell our colored soldiers for slaves, if they do he will get them back quick he will retaliate and stop it. Now Mr Lincoln dont you think you ought to stop this thing and make them do the same by the colored men they have lived in idleness all their lives on stolen labor and made savages of the colored people, but they now are so furious because they are proving themselves to be men, such as have come away and got some education. It must not be so. You must put the rebels to work in State prisons to making shoes and things, if they sell our colored soldiers, till they let them all go. And give their wounded the same treatment. It would seem cruel, but their no other way, and a just man must do hard things sometimes, that shew him to be a great man. They tell me some do you will take back the Proclamation, don’t do it. When you are dead and in Heaven, in a thousand years that action of yours will make the Angels sing your praises I know it. Ought one man to own another, law for or not, who made the law, surely the poor slave did not. so it is wicked, and a horrible Outrage, there is no sense in it, because a man has lived by robbing all his life and his father before him, should he complain because the stolen things found on him are taken. Robbing the colored people of their labor is but a small part of the robbery their souls are almost taken, they are made brutes of often. You know all about this [.] The

Will you see that the colored men fighting now, are fairly treated. You ought to do this, and do it at once. Not let the thing run along meet it quickly and manfully, and stop this, mean cowardly cruelty. We poor oppressed ones, appeal to you, and ask fair play. Yours for Christs sake

<td>Students often learn about black activism and voting rights in the context of the Civil Rights Movement of the 1950s and 60s. However, there is a heritage of black activism, including around voting rights that goes back more than century before the modern Civil Rights Movement. This lesson can help break down misconceptions about the fight for voting rights in the United States as well as provide an opportunity for students to understand that democracy is a work in progress that requires citizen participation to maintain and expand rights.</td>

Anticipatory Set

I. Four Corners Activity

A. Teacher note: Facing History and Ourselves provides a good explanation of this strategy. Structure the activity for what's best for your students! Link: https://www.facinghistory.org/resource-library/teaching-strategies/four-corners

B. Use the following statements for the Four Corners:

1. People who are not U.S. citizens should have the right to vote if they are living in the United States.
2. We should amend the Constitution to lower the voting age to 16 years old.
3. If you have committed a serious crime, you should not have the right to vote.

C. Debrief the activity:

   1. Summarize the main for and against arguments.
   2. Ask students to consider who wins and who loses in the situations presented in the statements.

II. Transition by explain to students that they have engaged in conversations about voting rights that have been part of our history since the framing of the Constitution

Instruction

III. Establish background knowledge

A. Explain that the original U.S. Constitution gave states a lot of autonomy to create voting laws for their own states, including determining who was allowed to vote. For example, Pennsylvania has changed its Constitution 5 times and each time has made a change related to voting.

B. Ask students what they know about voting rights history in the United States.

IV. Building of what students say about voting history, show students the section on voting from Pennsylvania’s 1790 Constitution. Link to entire Constitution here: http://www.duq.edu/academics/gumberg-library/pa-constitution/texts-of-the-constitution/1790

   A. Ask students what they notice. Who is included and who is excluded? What do they wonder about voting in PA under this Constitution?

   B. ARTICLE III: Section I. In elections by the citizens, every freeman of the age of twenty-one years, having resided in the state two years next before the election, and within that time paid a state or county tax, which shall have been assessed at least six months before the election, shall enjoy the rights of an elector: Provided, that the sons of persons qualified as aforesaid, between the ages of twenty-one and twenty-two years, shall be entitled to vote, although they shall not have paid taxes.

V. Explain that at this time many states barred votes based on race, but not Pennsylvania. However, this was about to change!

   A. Teacher note: It may be helpful at this point to out that progress is often not linear. Ask students what does progress mean and what should it look like when talking about rights. It may be helpful to use an analogy comparing rights to rubber bands. (SEE APPENDIX A)

VI. Continue to build background knowledge

   A. Philadelphia had one of the largest and free African-American communities before the Civil War.

   B. Philadelphia was also a center for abolitionist activity.

      1. The first formal protest of slavery in the United States was made in 1688 in Germantown. It challenged the Society of Friends (Quakers) to denounce slavery. Philadelphia Quakers have had a long history of abolitionism.

      2. 1774: The Pennsylvania Abolition Society, the first anti-slavery society in the United States was created in Philadelphia
3. 1780: The Pennsylvania Gradual Abolition Act went into effect freeing anyone enslaved at the time at the age of 28.

4. Most anti-slavery societies were NOT interracial. Philadelphia’s free black community created their own anti-slavery societies and collaborated with Philadelphia’s white abolitionists.

C. Most Philadelphians were not abolitionists. Many were active anti-abolitionists and held strong race prejudice. Race riots and violence were common occurrences. An example is the burning of Pennsylvania Hall in May of 1838. It was built as an anti-slavery meeting house, stood completed for three days and was burned down by anti-abolitionists.

1. For more information on this incident, a good overview with images can be found here: http://trilogy.brynmawr.edu/speccoll/quakersandslavery/commentary/organizations/pennsylvania_hall.php

D. In 1837, the year before the burning Pennsylvania held a Constitutional Convention partly to discuss changes to voting rights. African-Americans in PA had interpreted the term “freeman” to mean that they had the right to vote. In many counties outside of Philadelphia, African-Americans that met the requirements successfully voted. However, in Philadelphia most did not vote fearing violence. A combination of prejudice and politics can help explain the lack of consistency in voting amongst the black community under the 1790 Constitution.

1. Use a map of PA counties to give students a visual (SEE APPENDIX B)

E. Teacher note: these two resources provide good overviews

Instruction

VII. Give students a copy of the excerpted “Appeal of Forty Thousand Citizens, Threatened with Disenfranchisement, to the People of Pennsylvania” and the graphic organizer (SEE APPENDIX C and D).
| VIII. | Review the source information of the document and the vocabulary. |
| IX. | Students work in cooperative groups to read and answer the questions in the graphic organizer. |
| X. | Review questions together as a class. Ask students to predict happened with the PA Constitution. |
| A. | Share the result: In October, 1838, the voters approved the new Constitution by a slim margin (113,971 to 112,759) which included “white freeman” instead of just freeman. |
| B. | This is the language of the 1838 PA Constitution: ARTICLE III: Election franchise. Section I. In elections by the citizens, every white freeman of the age of twenty-one years, having resided in the State one year, and in the election district where he offers to vote, ten days immediately proceeding such election, and within two years paid a State or county tax, which shall have been assessed at least ten days before the election, shall enjoy the rights of an elector. But a citizen of the United States who had previously been a qualified voter of this State, and removed therefrom and returned, and who shall have resided in the election district, and paid taxes, as aforesaid, shall be entitled to vote after residing in the State six months: Provided, That white freemen, citizens of the United States, between the ages of twenty-one and twenty-two years, and having resided in the State one year and in the election district ten days, as aforesaid, shall be entitled to vote, although they shall not have paid taxes. |

| XI. | Tell students that we will now compare and contrast the arguments from the Appeal to the voting age issue that we discussed during the four corners activity. |
| XII. | Show students voting ages around the world using the CIA World Factbook. There are 8 pages. Consider giving each student a page to review. Share trends as a class. (SEE APPENDIX F) |

Rubber Band Rights—Expanding or Contracting Suffrage?

Metaphors are powerful teaching tools. They activate students’ imaginations and remain in their long-term memory. What if I told you that rights are like rubber bands? Picture me in front of my class, pulling on a rubber band, stretching it almost to the breaking point and then snapping it back. I then pose the question to students: How are your rights like a rubber band?

The most surprising fact students will learn through reading these articles is that history is not always a story of progress. It does not always move forward. Rights are not continuously expanding; like a rubber band, they can snap back. By comparing how voting rights were addressed in the Pennsylvania Constitution from 1776 to 1873, students will see a general regression, even though rights for some expanded. Some qualifications that were inclusive and expansive in the Pennsylvania Constitution of 1776 “snapped back” by 1838 and 1873, as African Americans and women were explicitly denied voting rights.

Bruce Hartford, 2010

The way that political change and social advancement is taught in school gives an impression that human progress in America is achieved steadily — like going up a ramp — each year society improves, each year is better than the last. And that those safely dead heroes of the distant past who worked and struggled for greater justice and democracy marched bravely forward to inevitable victory. It’s a warm and comforting illusion, but in the real world it’s rarely the case.

American abolitionists fought against slavery for decades, but slavery did not gradually decline year after year until it faded away — rather it was destroyed in the sudden cataclysm of the Civil War. From its inception in 1861, the NAACP struggled decade after decade to win voting rights for Blacks, with little progress to show in the Deep South. SNCC and CORE began combining voter-registration and direct action in 1961, and year after year — a time that to us "twenty-somethings" seemed interminable — nothing was gained, the number of Blacks registered in the Carolinas, Georgia, Alabama, Mississippi, and Louisiana barely changed. Then like a sudden bolt of lightning came Freedom Summer in 1964 and a few months later the Selma Voting Rights Campaign and the March to Montgomery, followed by passage of the Voting Rights Act of 1965. But those flashes of sudden lightening did not occur in a vacuum, they were based on, and grew out of, the years and decades of struggle that preceded them.

The struggles to abolish slavery and win voting rights both illustrate the "Rubber Band Theory of History": Imagine a block of wood sitting on a table. Attached to it is a long chain of rubber bands. You pull on the rubber bands hoping to move the block, but they just stretch and stretch and the block doesn’t move at all. You pull some more, and stretch the bands tighter, and nothing happens. You pull some more, and then suddenly the block moves so fast that it bangs you in the fingers. Sometimes.

Sometimes it works that way — but sometimes you pour your heart & soul into moving the block, you stretch and stretch the rubber bands, you march, you picket, you go to jail, but the block never moves. You achieve nothing. Which is why activists need to keep in mind Rabbi Tarfon, and the Tao of Social Struggle.

Which brings us to the "Water Strategy of Social Change:" Contrary to the deeply held beliefs of some ideologues, there is no instruction manual for achieving political reform (let alone, revolution). There is no easy how-to pamphlet, no simple 12-step program. Social struggle is like water flowing to the sea. If something dams the water, it goes around. If it can’t go around, it goes over, if it can’t go over, it goes under, if it can’t go around or over or under, it eats away at the blockage until it dissolves.

The Water Strategy recognizes that social change is an art, not a science. It’s a Darwinian process — you try something. If it works you do it more. If it fails, you try something else. That which succeeds survives and thrives, that which fails become stagnant political backwaters thinly inhabited by sterile dogmatists and irrelevant ideologues.

APPENDIX E (2 pages)

Today, there are thousands of Pennsylvanians between the ages of 16 and 18 that do not have the right to vote. Imagine that you are writing an “Appeal of Thousands of Young Citizens, Who Do not Have the Right to Vote, to the People of Philadelphia.”

Instructions: First, go back to the Appeal of Forty Thousand Citizens and compare and contrast their arguments to the issue of lowering the voting age to 16.

</table>

NEXT, decide the purpose of your appeal. Circle one.

I want to convince lawmakers to lower the voting age.

I want to convince lawmakers to keep the voting age at 18.
Write one to two paragraphs of your appeal. Make sure to develop at least one argument to support your side.
FIELD LISTING :: SUFFRAGE

<th>III. Explain to students that today they will be reading a speech given by a white woman who grew up in North Carolina and who’s family owned slaves. Angelina Grimke Weld moved to Philadelphia and found the anti-slavery community that spoke to her beliefs. She gave this speech inside of Pennsylvania Hall, a building that was funded by abolitionists so that they could have a space to hold meetings and fight for the cause of ending slavery. The building was burned down by a anti-abolitionists mob 4 days after it opened for business. While Angelina Grimke Weld gave the speech, the angry mob that would later burn the building was outside protesting.</th>

   C. Being a woman and understanding of her status in the same system
   D. Being a white Southerner that moved to the North
   E. Influence of women of England and their successful anti-slavery efforts (we can clearly see in this speech the global aspect of this movement)
   F. Being a member of the abolitionist community
   G. Literate |

   A. Angelina, and her sister, Sarah Grimke were the “first to apply the abolitionist doctrine of universal freedom and equality to the status of women.” (Eric Foner, Give Me Liberty textbook). They influenced the movement for women’s rights in Philadelphia, nationally and globally. They were well known for pushing boundaries and norms through their activism. |
|                      | XI. Ask students to go back to their warm-up question and create an identity chart that demonstrates connections between their identity and their passion for a cause/social issue. |

Angelina Grimké Weld's speech at Pennsylvania Hall
(May 17, 1838)

INSTRUCTIONS: Annotate the text as you read closely. Ways to annotate include:
A. Questions
B. Connections
C. Reactions
D. Important points
E. Summary
F. I notice..., I wonder..., What if?

NOTE: (Parentheses) indicate definitions for the word before it. [Brackets] indicate the actions and noises that happened while Grimke gave the speech.

Men, brethren and fathers -- mothers, daughters and sisters, what came ye out for to see? A reed shaken with the wind? Is it curiosity merely, or a deep sympathy with the perishing slave, that has brought this large audience together? [A yell from the mob without the building.] Those voices without ought to awaken and call out our warmest sympathies. Deluded beings! "they know not what they do." They know not that they are undermining their own rights and their own happiness, temporal and eternal. Do you ask, "what has the North to do with slavery?" Hear it -- hear it. Those voices without tell us that the spirit of slavery is here, and has been roused to wrath by our abolition speeches and conventions: for surely liberty would not foam and tear herself with rage, because her friends are multiplied daily, and meetings are held in quick succession to set forth her virtues and extend her peaceful kingdom. This opposition shows that slavery has done its deadliest work in the hearts of our citizens. Do you ask, then, "what has the North to do?" I answer, cast out first the spirit of slavery from your own hearts, and then lend your aid to convert the South. Each one present has a work to do, be his or her situation what it may, however limited their means, or insignificant their supposed influence. The great men of this country will not do this work; the church will never do it. A desire to please the world, to keep the favor of all parties and of all conditions, makes them dumb on this and every other unpopular subject. They have become worldly-wise, and therefore God, in his wisdom, employs them not to carry on his plans of reformation and salvation. He hath chosen the foolish things of the world to confound the wise, and the weak to overcome the mighty.

As a Southerner I feel it is my duty to stand up here to-night and bear testimony against slavery. I have seen it -- I have seen it. I know it has horrors that can never be described. I was brought up under its wing: I witnessed for many years its demoralizing influences, and its destructive to human happiness. It is admitted by some that the slave is not happy under the worst forms of slavery. But I have never seen a happy slave. I have seen him dance in his chains, it is true; but he was not happy. There is a wide difference between happiness and mirth (joy). Man cannot enjoy the former while his manhood is destroyed, and that part of the being which is necessary to the making, and to the enjoyment of happiness, is completely blotted out. The slaves, however, may be, and sometimes are, mirthful. When hope is extinguished, they say, "let us eat and drink, for tomorrow we die." [Just then stones were thrown at the windows, -- a great noise without, and commotion within.] What is a mob? What would the breaking of every window be? What would the levelling of this Hall be? Any evidence that we are wrong, or that slavery is a good and wholesome institution? What if the mob should now burst in upon us, break up our meeting and commit violence upon our persons -- would this be any thing compared with what the slaves endure? No, no: and we do not remember them "as bound with them," if we shrink in the time of peril, or feel unwilling to sacrifice ourselves, if need be, for their sake. [Great noise.] I thank the Lord that there is yet life left enough to feel the truth, even though it rages at it -- that conscience is not so completely seared (burned) as to be unmoved by the truth of the living God.

Many persons go to the South for a season, and are hospitably entertained in the parlor and at the table of the slave-holder. They never enter the huts of the slaves; they know nothing of the dark side of the picture, and they return home with praises on their lips of the generous character of those with whom they had tarried (spent time with). Or if they have witnessed the cruelties of slavery, by remaining silent spectators they have naturally become callous (insensitive; unfeeling) -- an insensibility has ensued which prepares them to apologize even for barbarity. Nothing but the corrupting influence of slavery on the hearts of the Northern people can induce them to apologize for it; and much will have been done for the destruction of Southern slavery when we have so reformed the North that no one here will be willing to risk his reputation by advocating or even excusing the holding of men as property. The South know it, and acknowledge that as fast as our principles prevail, the hold of the master must be relaxed. [Another outbreak of mobocratic spirit, and some confusion in the house.]

How wonderfully constituted is the human mind! How it resists, as long as it can, all efforts made to reclaim from error! I feel that all this disturbance is but an evidence that our efforts are the best that could have been adopted, or else the friends of slavery would not care for what we say and do. The South know what we do. I am thankful that they are reached by our efforts. Many times have I wept in the land of my birth, over the system of slavery. I knew of none who sympathized in my feelings -- I was unaware that any efforts were made to deliver the oppressed -- no voice in the wilderness was heard calling on the people to repent and do works meet for repentance -- and my heart sickened within me. Oh, how should I have rejoiced to know that such efforts as these were being made. I only wonder that I had such feelings. I wonder when I reflect under what influence I was brought up that my heart is not harder than the nether millstone. But in the midst of temptation I was preserved, and my sympathy grew warmer, and my hatred of slavery more inveterate (unlikely to change), until at last I have exiled myself from my native land because I could no longer endure to hear the wailing of the slave. I fled to the land of Penn; for here, thought I, sympathy for the slave will surely be found. But I found it not. The people were kind and hospitable, but the slave had no place in their thoughts. Whenever questions were put to me as to his condition, I felt that they were dictated by an idle curiosity, rather than by that deep feeling which would lead to effort for his rescue. I therefore shut up my grief in my own heart. I remembered that I was a Carolinian, from a state which framed this iniquity by law. I knew that throughout her territory was continual suffering, on the one part, and continual brutality and sin on the other. Every Southern breeze wafted to me the discordant tones of weeping and wailing, shrieks and groans, mingled with prayers and blasphemous curses. I thought there was no hope; that the wicked would go on in his wickedness, until he had destroyed both himself and his country. My heart sunk within me at the abominations (thing that causes disgust) in the midst of which I had been born and educated. What will it avail (help), cried I in bitterness of spirit, to expose to the gaze of strangers the horrors and pollutions of slavery, when there is no ear to hear nor heart to feel and pray for the slave. The language of my soul was, "Oh tell it not in Gath (Biblical city), publish it not in the streets of Askelon (Biblical city)." But how different do I feel now! Animated with hope, nay, with an assurance of the triumph of liberty and good will to man, I will lift up my voice like a trumpet, and show this people their transgression (wrong), their sins of omission towards the slave, and what they can do towards affecting Southern mind, and overthrowing Southern oppression.

We may talk of occupying neutral ground, but on this subject, in its present attitude, there is no such thing as neutral ground. He that is not for us is against us, and he that gathereth not with us, scattereth abroad. If you are on what you suppose to be neutral ground, the South look upon you as on the side of the oppressor. And is there one who loves his country willing to give his influence, even indirectly, in favor of slavery -- that curse of nations? God swept Egypt with the besom of destruction, and punished Judea also with a sore punishment, because of slavery. And have we any reason to believe that he is less just now? -- or that he will be more favorable to us than to his own "peculiar people?" [Shoutings, stones thrown against the windows, &c.]

There is nothing to be feared from those who would stop our mouths, but they themselves should fear and tremble. The current is even now setting fast against them. If the arm of the North had not caused the Bastile (bastile) of slavery to totter to its foundation, you would not hear those cries. A few years ago, and the South felt secure, and with a contemptuous sneer asked, "Who are the abolitionists? The abolitionists are nothing?" -- Ay, in one sense they were nothing, and they are nothing still. But in this we rejoice, that "God has chosen things that are not to bring to nought things that are." [Mob again disturbed the meeting.]

We often hear the question asked, What shall we do? Here is an opportunity for doing something now. Every man and every woman present may do something by showing that we fear not a mob, and, in the midst of threatenings and revilings, by opening our mouths for the dumb (not able to speak) and pleading the cause of those who are ready to perish.
To work as we should in this cause, we must know what Slavery is. Let me urge you then to buy the books which have been written on this subject and read them, and then lend them to your neighbors. Give your money no longer for things which pander to pride and lust, but aids in scattering "the living coals of truth" upon the naked heart of this nation, — in circulating appeals to the sympathies of Christians in behalf of the outraged and suffering slave. But, it is said by some, our "books and papers do not speak the truth." Why, then, do they not contradict what we say? They cannot. Moreover the South has entreated, nay commanded us to be silent; and what greater evidence of the truth of our publications could be desired?

Women of Philadelphia! allow me as a Southern woman, with much attachment to the land of my birth, to entreat you to come up to this work. Especially let me urge you to pettion. Men may settle this and other questions at the ballot-box, but you have no such right; it is only through petitions that you can reach the Legislature. It is therefore peculiarly your duty to petition. Do you say, "It does no good?" The South already turns pale at the number sent. They have read the reports of the proceedings of Congress, and there have been seen that among other petitions were very many from the women of the North on the subject of slavery. This fact has called the attention of the South to the subject. How could we expect to have done more as yet? Men who hold the rod over slaves, rule in the councils of the nation: and they deny our right to petition and to remonstrate against abuses of our sex and of our kind. We have these rights, however, from our God. Only let us exercise them: and though often turned away unanswered, let us remember the influence of importunity upon the unjust judge, and act accordingly. The fact that the South look with jealousy upon our measures shows that they are effectual. There is, therefore, no cause for doubting or despair, but rather for rejoicing.

It was remarked in England that women did much to abolish Slavery in her colonies. Nor are they now idle (inactive). Numerous petitions from them have recently been presented to the Queen, to abolish the apprenticeship with its cruelties nearly equal to those of the system whose place it supplies. One petition two miles and a quarter long has been presented. And do you think these labors will be in vain? Let the history of the past answer. When the women of these States send up to Congress such a petition, our legislators will arise as did those of England, and say, "When all the maids and matrons of the land are knocking at our doors we must legislate (create laws)." Let the zeal and love, the faith and works of our English sisters quicken ours — that while the slaves continue to suffer, and when they shout deliverance, we may feel the satisfaction of having done what we could.

<td>In this lesson students will learn about oral history as a sources for learning about the past. They will listen to oral histories of people who migrated to Philadelphia from the South in the 20th century. While the oral histories provide insight into various aspects of life, the unifying focus is voting. When researching African-American suffrage, most sources speak to the Southern experience. We miss out on the experiences and impact of the electorate in the North after the passing of the 15th Amendment. As one of the largest African-American communities in the country, Philadelphia has rich oral histories from which we can gain perspective on voting in the North.</td>

1) Who is the interviewee?
   a) What effect might the interviewee's social identity and position have on the interview?
   b) What influences—personal, cultural, social—might shape the way the interviewee expresses himself or herself?

2) Evaluate the interviewer.
   a) How do the interviewer's questions shape the story told?
   b) How adept is the interviewer in getting the narrator to tell his/her story in his/her own way?
   c) How might the dynamic between narrator and interviewer affect what is said in the interview?

3) What has been said in the interview?
   a) What's the plot of the story that the interviewee tells?
   b) What does this tell us about the way the narrator thinks about his/her experience?
   c) What images, anecdotes does the narrator use to encapsulate experience?
   d) What can this tell us about how the narrator thinks about his/her experience?
   e) What does the narrator avoid or sidestep?
   f) What topics does the narrator especially warm to, or speak about with interest, enthusiasm, or conviction?
   g) What might this tell us?
   h) Are there times when the narrator doesn't seem to answer the question posed?
   i) What might be the reason for this?

4) Voting
   a) What have you learned about voting and democracy through the interview?
   b) Compare and contrast the voting experiences in the two oral histories that you listened to.
APPENDIX B

All links include a short biography of the interviewee, recording of the interview ranging from 1-1.5 hours long, an index, and a transcript. All oral histories are housed on the website called “Goin North”. Find out more about the project here: http://goinnorth.org/about.

<td>When researching African-American suffrage, most sources speak to the Southern experience. We miss out on the experiences and impact of the electorate in the North after the passing of the 15th Amendment. This lesson seeks to leverage our students as oral historians and their day off on Election Day to capture the experiences and evolution of voting in Philadelphia in the past 100 years. Especially as one of the largest African-American communities in the US that also received emigration from the South, Philadelphia is rich with stories that can highlight how people experienced democracy.</td>

| Anticipatory Set | I. Warm-up: What feelings does voting generate for people? Do “feelings” around voting matter?
II. Explain to students that they will be engaging in an oral history project to explore the landscape of voting in Philadelphia |
|---|---|
| Instruction | III. Tell students that we want to find out about the voting experience in Philadelphia. What are some questions that we can use to open up the conversation or follow-up questions to our interviewee’s responses.
A. Ask a students what they envision a successful interview will sound like.
B. Generate list of questions together, students write them down.
C. Generate a list of do’s and don’ts for a successful interview. |
| Instruction | IV. Ask for a student volunteer to interview the teacher about their voting experience
A. Teacher note: This is a teaching moment. Consider what the interview experience will be like for students and present similar challenges.
V. Critique the interview as a class. What went well and what could be done better?
VI. Ask for another student volunteer to interview teacher again.
VII. Critique the interview as a class. What went well and what could be done better?
VIII. Go back and add to list of questions, and do’s and don’ts list.
A. Teacher note: have students write these down OR type this up and provide them with copies. |
| Independent Practice | IX. Students prepare for their interviews:
A. Students identify two people to interview about their voting experiences and prepare personalized questions that will open up the conversation.
B. Students identify a recording device (smartphones) and test it out for quality sound (and digital space).
   1. Teacher note: have alternative plans for students | that do not have access to recording devices.

X. Students conduct and record interviews for homework.
   A. Teacher Note: Make sure to give students ample time!

XI. If students have access to computers, students transcribe their interviews. Provide students with formatting examples.

XII. Students write an analysis of their interviews. Questions to guide analysis. (source: http://historymatters.gmu.edu/mse/oral/summary.html)
   A. Who is the interviewee?
      1. What is the interviewee’s relationship to the events under discussion?
      2. What effect might the interviewee’s social identity and position have on the interview?
      3. What influences—personal, cultural, social—might shape the way the narrator expresses himself or herself?
      4. Consider especially how the events under discussion are generally regarded and how popular culture might shape the narrator’s account.
   B. Evaluate yourself as an interviewer.

D. Compare and contrast your two interviews
E. Personal reflection
   1. Do you think that your views about voting have been influenced by those around you? Why or why not?
   2. What have you learned about voting and democracy through this process?

| Closure | XIII. On plain printer paper, students write a quote from their interviews that they think demonstrates something important or profound. Use markers to others can easily see and use the entire paper. |
|         | XIV. Students will tape their quotes onto the wall for a gallery walk. |
|         | XV. Students walk around silently reading the quotes. |
|         | XVI. After 3 to 5 minutes, ask students to stand next to the quote that they connected with the most. |

APPENDIX D (3 PAGES)

Civil Rights in a Northern City: Philadelphia

Introduction

During World War II, the Philadelphia Transit Company was one of the largest transit systems in the country, serving approximately 2,500,000 passengers per day. In August 1944, in the midst of the war, Philadelphia was also the country's third largest war production city. Just two months after the D-Day landings on the northern coast of France, when American unity abroad and at home was most crucial, hundreds of Philadelphia Transit Company employees went on strike to protest the promotion of eight black PTC employees to the position of trolley car driver. Strikers refused to go to work, and all scheduled transportation runs were at a standstill. By the end of August 1, the first day of the strike, 300,000 war workers who relied on the Philadelphia Transit Company had not been able to get to work, and war production was seriously diminished.

After several days of crippled war production and racial violence, the strike ended when President Roosevelt authorized federal troops to enter the city of Philadelphia. The Philadelphia Transit Company Strike of 1944 began as a racially-motivated strike on the local level, but quickly escalated to include federal involvement because of war-production implications.

Early War Years

On December 7, 1941, Japan launched a preemptive attack on the United States when Japanese planes bombed Pearl Harbor. This prompted the United States and Britain officially to declare war on Japan the following day, December 8, 1941. Although the United States had been engaged in diplomatic talks and assisting the Allied powers with materials and capital, the bombing of Pearl Harbor launched the United States into full scale involvement in World War II. This resulted in an increased need for soldiers and vehicles, ground weapons, and naval ships. Philadelphia quickly became America's third largest source of war production, especially in Navy production.

In the early years of the war, the federal government issued various executive orders and legislation supporting the war effort. On June 25, 1941, President Franklin D. Roosevelt signed Executive Order 8802, prohibiting racial discrimination within the national defense industry. And, in order to support war production, he signed Executive Order 9346, on May 27, 1943, mandating fair employment practices. The order called for the utilization of all manpower and the end of discriminatory employment practices and established the Fair Employment Practice Commission to ensure that these goals were met. In Fall 1943, the FEPC ordered the Philadelphia Transit Company to stop discriminatory practices. In the months leading up to the
In Philadelphia, the local NAACP chapter began to work actively in 1943 to publicize the issues and rally support. They pressured both the PTC and the federal government to institute fair hiring practices at the PTC, staging peaceful demonstrations and other activities. The Philadelphia Transit Company and the union representing many of its members, the Philadelphia Rapid Transit Employee’s Union, were initially opposed to any integration of the work force. Misrepresentation of the impact of integration on seniority policies complicated the discussions as did union power struggles.

After union members voted in Spring 1944, the Transit Workers Union had replaced the PRTEU as the official bargaining agent for PTC workers. The TWU promised to comply with the federal legislation and to participate in non-discriminatory hiring practices. The PTC was receiving federal and local pressure to integrate their workforce. A climate for conflict was built as actors in the city continued to resist change.

In July 1944, the War Manpower Commission ruled that the PTC had to align their hiring practices with policies of the United States Employment Service, which had a strict nondiscrimination policy. On July 27, 1944, the PTC finally showed signs of compliance when it promoted eight African American employees to the position of motormen. These eight men were the first of 537 black employees, among an 11,000 PTC workforce, to be promoted to a highly skilled job. When white PTC workers heard of the pending promotions, they gathered on company property and decided to strike if African Americans were promoted. They understood that the ability of war production workers to get to work was critical to keeping up the war effort at a key point in the war.

The Strike

The Philadelphia Transit Company Strike began on August 1, 1944, at 4:00 in the morning. Many employees called in ‘sick,’ and strikers quickly blocked car barn entrances with automobiles to prevent employees from entering. Three PTC employees and one non-PTC employee led the strike. James McMenamin, James Dixon, and Frank Thompson were all veteran employees of the company, and Frank Carney was the former president of the PRTEU. By noon on that first day, 4,500 workers had struck, and all transit vehicles were stopped, and, by the evening of the first day, war production was crippled badly because many employees could not get to the war plants to perform their jobs.

The strikers organized a committee to lead their efforts, led by James McMenamin. As spokesman, McMenamin declared on August 2, that the strike was "strictly a black and white issue," and that strikers would not return to work until the eight black employees had been stripped of their promotions. Also on August 2, a TWU member back to work movement failed, but the TWU continued to encourage its members to return to work. Negotiations remained at a stalemate for three days, until President Roosevelt, under the power of the Smith-Connally Act, authorized Major General Philip Hayes and his troops to seize control of the Philadelphia Transit Company.

On Saturday, August 5, General Hayes marched 5,000 heavily armed troops on the city of Philadelphia. The soldiers set up encampments in Fairmount Park. The soldiers were largely used to protect PTC employees who still wished to work and to operate the transit cars. After the Army’s arrival, limited and sporadic transportation was available during the remainder of the strike, but it was not enough to funnel all 2,500,000 of its daily passengers successfully. Many Philadelphians had to resort to driving their cars or hitch hiking. In one instance, nurses caught rides on a milk delivery cart.

While intemperate and racially-charged statements and actions continued throughout the strike, violence was largely avoided. The strikers continued to object to black promotions. Blacks were vocal about wanting their rights. Many argued that if they could fight in the war and drive tanks, they should be able to drive the trolley cars. Strikers, and some black and white residents smashed store windows, dragged individuals from cars and beat them, and mugged individuals on the street, and two white men shot a thirteen year old boy in a drive-by shooting. However, due to local and state government actions to close liquor stores and increase the police presence in the city, and work by the NAACP and other black organizations in the city, peace generally prevailed. It became clear that many Philadelphians and the nation were against the strike, viewing it as unpatriotic.

A defining characteristic of the strike was its connection to the war effort, which was noticeably crippled because of the strike. The Philadelphia Naval Yard, home to 58,000 employees, was where allied ships that were damaged in the Atlantic were repaired. It contained an airfield, and heavy artillery was also produced there. In addition, absences at other local war plants caused great loss of time and crippled the overall production of badly needed war materials. The strikes posed a deadly problem not only to the blacks who were being discriminated against, but also to the soldiers on the front lines of the war effort. Time was money and victory.

Prior to Saturday, August 5, Major General Hayes had grown tired of various ways of ending the strike. He had pleaded with the strikers to resume work and argued that they were hurting the war effort, blaming them for loss of life on the front lines. After many failed attempts to appeal to the strikers, he issued a statement that if strikers did not return to work by Monday they would lose their draft deferments, be black-listed by the War Manpower Commission so they could not get another job, and would not be eligible for unemployment benefits. Throughout the majority of Sunday, August 6, PTC employees began filling out cards which pledged that they would return to work on Monday, August 7, 1944.

Aftermath
The strike ended on Monday, August 7, 1944. Except for the four leaders of the strike who were fired and arrested, Philadelphia Transit Company employees resumed work on Monday morning, and the trains began to run as usual. The eight black motormen were instructed to remain at home on Monday, until the transit system was working again without a hitch. The eight returned to work on Wednesday, August 9, and began their training. The federal troops remained in Philadelphia and rode the street cars until August 17, when they finally returned control to the PTC and withdrew from the city. The strike had nevertheless been costly with a significant loss of war materials production.

By September 1944, seven of the new black motormen were driving PTC trolleys. By the following month, the number of black employees working as motormen had doubled. Black employees in skilled positions steadily increased over the following years. The 1944 PTC Strike was not successful in preventing the advancement of black PTC employees, and racial progress had been made in Philadelphia toward a more equitable job market.

I. Warm-up: If you could create any business, what would it be? How will you make money? What kind of resources would you need? Would you keep be it small or try to grow it into a corporation? How would your business interact with the community? Would it address any social issues that we have in our society?

II. Discuss warm-up. Focus question: how would you balance making money and dealing with inequality in the world?

III. Transition by explaining that there has been a long history of figuring out the relationship between business and society and government. Today we take for granted that businesses follow laws that are meant to ensure their social responsibility. However, the global nature of our economies make social responsibility challenging. Today we’re going to learn about one example of this challenge and the response and legacy of a Philadelphian. His name is Leon Sullivan.

APPENDIX A

Sullivan Principles

By Molly Roth

The Global Sullivan Principles, launched in 1977 by Philadelphia civil rights leader Leon H. Sullivan (1922-2001), represent one of the twentieth century’s most powerful attempts to effect social justice through economic leverage. More a sustained movement than a static document, the principles sought to bring the power of American investment in South Africa to bear on the cruel injustice of the apartheid state by establishing baseline commitments to fairness and empowerment as conditions for operating in the country.

Sullivan, a native of West Virginia coal-mining country, came to Philadelphia in 1950 to pastor Zion Baptist Church on North Broad Street by way of a stop in Harlem, where he served as assistant minister to Adam Clayton Powell Jr. (1908-72) at the Abyssinian Baptist Church. Sullivan believed that Christian ministry needed to be geared to action and described himself as preaching a “pragmatic gospel.”

Sullivan had honed his economic activism through what he called the “selective patronage” campaign, begun in 1958. Dissatisfied with the economic opportunities open to minorities and women, he helped to organize a coalition of 400 black ministers across Philadelphia to address discrimination in employment. If companies declined appeals from the coalition to hire blacks into professional and managerial positions, the ministers would urge their congregants to withhold their patronage. “Don’t buy where you can’t work,” they advised. This flexing of consumer muscle by Philadelphia’s black population yielded impressive results in terms of access to employment and confirmed the tactical power of coordinated economic resistance.

National Attention

The campaign’s success also won Sullivan national attention. Life magazine included him in its list of the country’s 100 leading citizens in 1963, and the Rev. Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. (1929-68), called on him to help develop “Operation Breadbasket,” later headed by the Rev. Jesse L. Jackson (b. 1941). This exposure also contributed to Sullivan’s appointment in 1971 to the board of General Motors as the first black director of a major U.S. corporation.

Sullivan voiced his opposition to General Motors’ involvement in South Africa beginning with his first shareholder meeting, taking the highly unusual step of speaking in opposition to a majority position of the board. "To a great measure, the system of apartheid is being underwritten by American industry, interests, and investments," Sullivan said. His commitment to the anti-apartheid cause intensified during a 1975 trip to South Africa, where he saw some of apartheid's evil effects up close. He wrote that the inspiration for the principles was born out of suggestions by African leaders he met with on that trip.

"Why doesn't someone do something about apartheid?" Sullivan described himself as asking. "I prayed to God. God spoke back to me and said, 'You do something about it.'"

On April 1, 1977, the Principles of Equal Rights, which became known around the world as the Sullivan Principles, were publicly announced with twelve signatories: 3M, American Cyanamid, Burroughs, Caltex (Chevron Oill), Citibank, Ford, General Motors, IBM, International Harvester, Mobil, Otis Elevator, and Union Carbide. By 1987, 125 companies from around the world had subscribed. The Sullivan Principles were enshrined in the Anti-Apartheid Act of 1986, legislation authored by Congressmen William H. Gray (1941-2013) of Pennsylvania and Stephen J. Solarz (1940-2010) of New York and passed with a congressional override of a veto by President Ronald Reagan (1911-2004). The legislation prohibited U.S. companies from engaging in segregationist practices anywhere in the world.

Compromise Had a Role

In his book Moving Mountains, Sullivan described his struggles with the proper formulation of his principles, because he believed that the correct course was to compromise at some moments to win acceptance and support. "Each year...the principles became more ambitious and thus more difficult to implement," he wrote. In their original form, the principles lacked the demand that foreign companies recognize black labor unions; this was added in 1984.

After a decade, Sullivan came to believe that the principles were no longer contributing sufficiently to pressuring the government of South Africa to end apartheid, and so he moved from the original principles' call for constructive engagement to worldwide boycott. Sustained international opposition eventually brought about multi-racial democratic elections and the election of Nelson Mandela (b. 1918) as the first black president of South Africa in 1994.

Continuing the principles' evolution, in 1999 Sullivan and then-United Nations Secretary General Kofi Annan (b. 1938) unveiled the Global Sullivan Principles of Social Responsibility, an expanded formulation of the principles of corporate citizenship. Into the twenty-first century, the legacy of the Global Sullivan Principles continued to be invoked in strategies to use buying and investing power to address a wide range of social issues, from combating gun violence to ending the Israeli occupation of the West Bank.

Molly Roth is a non-profit administrator in Philadelphia with an interest in the cultural anthropology of Mande West Africa. She served as Executive Director of OIC International, an international development agency founded by Leon H. Sullivan, from 2007 to 2009, and as Founding Executive Director of the Global Philadelphia Association in 2010 and 2011.
The Principles of Equal Rights
1. Nonsegregation of the races in all eating, comfort, and work facilities.
2. Equal and fair employment practices for all employees.
3. Equal pay for all employees doing equal or comparable work for the same period of time.
4. Initiation of and development of training programs that will prepare, in substantial numbers, blacks and other nonwhites for supervisory, administrative, clerical, and technical jobs.
5. Increasing the number of blacks and other nonwhites in management and supervisory positions.
6. Improving the quality of employees’ lives outside the work environment in such areas as housing, transportation, school, recreation, and health facilities.
7. Working to eliminate laws and customs that impede social, economic, and political justice.
(added in 1984)

The Global Sullivan Principles
As a company which endorses the Global Sullivan Principles we will respect the law, and as a responsible member of society we will apply these Principles with integrity consistent with the legitimate role of business. We will develop and implement company policies, procedures, training and internal reporting structures to ensure commitment to these principles throughout our organisation. We believe the application of these Principles will achieve greater tolerance and better understanding among peoples, and advance the culture of peace.

Accordingly, we will:
1. Express our support for universal human rights and, particularly, those of our employees, the communities within which we operate, and parties with whom we do business.
2. Promote equal opportunity for our employees at all levels of the company with respect to issues such as color, race, gender, age, ethnicity or religious beliefs, and operate without unacceptable worker treatment such as the exploitation of children, physical punishment, female abuse, involuntary servitude, or other forms of abuse.
3. Respect our employees’ voluntary freedom of association.
4. Compensate our employees to enable them to meet at least their basic needs and provide the opportunity to improve their skill and capability to raise their social and economic opportunities.
5. Provide a safe and healthy workplace; protect human health and the environment; and promote sustainable development.
6. Promote fair competition including respect for intellectual and other property rights, and not offer, pay or accept bribes.
7. Work with governments and communities in which we do business to improve the quality of life in those communities – their educational, cultural, economic and social well-being – and seek to provide training and opportunities for workers from disadvantaged backgrounds.
8. Promote the application of these principles by those with whom we do business.

We will be transparent in our implementation of these principles and provide information which demonstrates publicly our commitment to them.

Addressing Dehumanizing Language from History: Facing History and Ourselves

It is very difficult to use and discuss the term “nigger” in the classroom, but its use throughout history and its presence in this unit’s primary sources make it necessary to acknowledge it and set guidelines for students about whether or not to pronounce it when reading aloud or quoting from the text. Otherwise, this word’s presence might distract students from an open discussion of history and human behavior. We believe that the best way to prepare to encounter this language is to create a classroom contract outlining guidelines for respectful, reflective classroom discussion.

We also recommend the following articles to help you determine how to approach the term in your classroom:

- “Exploring the Controversy: The ‘N’ Word” from “Huck Finn” in Context: A Teaching Guide (PBS)
- “Straight Talk about the N-Word” from Teaching Tolerance (Southern Poverty Law Center)

APPENDIX C

Student Name:

Industrial Workers of the World
By Peter Cole

NOTE: Definitions added by teacher in parenthesis and italics.
Instructions: The guiding questions pertain to the paragraph before it.

Benjamin Harrison Fletcher (1890-1949)
Born in Philadelphia, Fletcher joined the IWW in 1912. It is unknown how he became radicalized but, presumably, he heard street speakers in his diverse, working class South Philadelphia neighborhood. Fletcher became the most prominent leader in Local 8 and the most influential African American in the entire IWW. During World War I, the federal government targeted the IWW, and Fletcher was the sole African American among the hundred Wobblies convicted of treason in 1918. Although no evidence was brought against him specifically, Fletcher received a ten-year prison sentence and an astronomical $30,000 fine. Fletcher served about three years before his sentence was commuted in 1922. He remained firmly committed to the Wobblies although never again played a major role. Fletcher’s health failed while still young, and he died after living in Brooklyn for fifteen years. (Woodcut by Carlos Cortez, published with permission of Charles H. Kerr Press)

IWW Membership Button, 1917
For most of a decade, anyone who wanted to work on the Philadelphia waterfront had to be a member of Local 8. In order to ensure that only fully paid-up members worked, Local 8 distributed a new button monthly. When an employer hired someone not wearing the proper button, Local 8 members were known to stop work until that person paid his dues—demonstrating the Wobblies’ commitment to direct action on the job.

In the early 1900s thousands in greater Philadelphia belonged to the Industrial Workers of the World (IWW)—a militant, leftist labor union. Local (short for local union branch) 8, which organized the city’s longshoremen (person employed to load and unload ships), was the largest and most powerful IWW branch in the Mid-Atlantic and the IWW’s most racially inclusive branch. Indeed, there might not have been a more egalitarian union anywhere in the nation in the early twentieth century. Known as Wobblies, these early union activists also organized Philadelphians in other industries, especially textiles and metal making.

Question #1: What does it mean to be militant and leftist?
Question # 2: Why is the significance of an egalitarian union at this time?

Founded in 1905, the IWW believed that capitalism (a system where there is private ownership of resources for profit) was inherently unjust, resulting in the oppression of the great majority (workers) by a tiny, wealthy elite (employers). According to the IWW preamble, these groups “shared nothing in common.” Hence, the Wobblies called for revolutionary changes to create a more just society where everyone could enjoy the fruits of industrialization.

Question # 3: Describe capitalism in your own words.

Question # 4: Do you agree with the IWW preamble, that workers share nothing in common with employers? Explain.

Shortly after its founding, workers in Philadelphia’s largest industry, textiles, started joining the IWW, as did those in textile centers across southeastern Pennsylvania and New Jersey, especially Paterson. Similarly, Philadelphia Wobblies maintained ties to Chester, Camden, and Wilmington. Many renowned Wobblies spoke in Philadelphia, including Elizabeth Gurley Flynn, “Big Bill” Haywood, John Reed, Arturo Giovannitti, and Carlo Tresca. However, the most important leader and greatest speaker was the locally-born African American dockworker, Ben Fletcher (1890-1949).
Thousands of Longshoremen

As one of America’s busiest ports, thousands of longshoremen toiled on both sides of the Delaware and Schuylkill Rivers, loading everything from Baldwin locomotives to Stetson hats and unloading unrefined sugar from Cuba and coal from nearby mines.

Reflecting the city’s diversity, the city’s roughly five thousand longshoremen in 1913 were about one-third African American, a third Irish and Irish American, and a third Europeans, especially Lithuanians and Poles. Employers counted on racism and xenophobia (intense dislike or fear of people from other countries) to keep workers from unionizing. However, thousands struck that year and quickly joined Local 8 because it practiced equality by insuring, among other things that a member of every major ethnic group was represented on the negotiating committee.

Question #5: How did Local 8 succeed in creating an interracial union? Why is this significant?

The IWW’s militant tactics worked. Over the next decade, Local 8 dominated area labor relations because its members proved willing to fight for better conditions. Predictably, the empowered longshoremen experienced intense opposition from employers and the government (including the wartime arrests of Fletcher and other leaders on bogus charges of “espionage and sedition”). Beyond winning raises and improving work conditions, Local 8 also integrated work gangs, gatherings, and leadership posts—all unprecedented.

Employers Resort to Lockout

In 1922 employers taking advantage of postwar America’s worsening labor and race relations, “locked out” Local 8 members and broke their hold. This pushback was part of the first, national “Red Scare,” (promotion of fear of communism and leftists) also signaling a backlash against the growing number of African Americans in the area. Locally and nationally, the IWW went into decline, but its ideals persisted. When the more conservative International Longshoremen’s Association returned unionism along the Delaware River, it had to acknowledge the power of African Americans. Further, the Wobbly commitment to ethnic, gender, and racial inclusion regardless of craft or skill was championed in the 1930s by the Congress of Industrial Organizations.
Question # 6: What factors contributed to the division of Local 8?

Although the IWW never was as strong or large in Philadelphia, or elsewhere, after the 1920s, the organization and its ideals lived on, revived by activists across the country in the 1960s and, in Philadelphia, in the 1980s. Indeed, in the last few decades, Wobblies continued to demonstrate impressive passion: to its still-radical commitment to equality across all lines; use of direct action tactics (on the job and in the streets); and brilliant use of language to skewer the status quo in song, posters, and later on the Internet.

In the 1980s, a small but impressively organized community of Wobblies, anarchists, and other leftist radicals established beachheads (defended position) in West Philadelphia, including squatting in abandoned row-houses, later taking ownership of some and turning them into collectively-owned properties. Local Wobblies also set up a bookstore in West Philadelphia and were active in the Occupy Philly encampment at City Hall in 2011. As in numerous other cities in the US and beyond, Philadelphia’s IWW persisted, still deeply committed to charting a path to a post-capitalist, post-racist world.

Question # 7: What is the legacy of Local 8 and IWW?

Question # 8: What connections can you make between this history and other aspects of the past or present?
Peter Cole is a Professor of History at Western Illinois University in Macomb. His current research compares how longshore workers in Durban, South Africa and the San Francisco Bay area participated in the civil rights and anti-apartheid movements as well as how they responded to radical technological changes in global trade.

<td>The late 19th century was a time of great medical advancement in Philadelphia and abroad. Philadelphia had a reputation for being particularly well respected in the medical community as the city was the home to many medical institutions and America’s first hospital, Pennsylvania Hospital, which still operates to this day. Thomas Eakins was a prominent Philadelphia painter at the time and he is known for two controversial pieces of art depicting medical practices in Philadelphia. By viewing these two images and reading a passage about the influential Dr. Joseph Lister, students will be able to see how medical advancement around the world were received and promoted in Philadelphia for the betterment of the city.</td>

The Gross Clinic, Thomas Eakins 1875

The Agnew Clinic, Thomas Eakins 1889
In order to better understand his most important work, namely, Lister’s discovery of the principles of antiseptic surgery, it will be necessary to suggest briefly the conditions that prevailed in hospitals. At that time there was no security that the simplest operation would not end in a fatal septicemia.

... When a dresser or a house surgeon entered upon his term of office, he hunted up an old coat... Their operating coats lasted from year to year and eventually acquired an incrustation of filth of which the owners appeared unconscious or even proud... No attempt was made to isolate septic cases; nurses and dressers passed directly from erysipelas wards to healthy patients... The supply of water even in the operating theaters was inadequate and one of the frequent duties of the operating surgeon was the performing of postmortem examinations. As in Vienna... the surgeon used frequently to come from the post-mortem chamber directly to the operating room, with only such cleanliness as common decency demanded.’ Surgeons were not ashamed to speak of a "good old surgical stink."

...The mortality statistics after amputation gives some indication as to the prevailing conditions. At the Edinburgh Infirmary the death rate was 43 per cent; at Glasgow Infirmary 89.1 per cent. At the Pennsylvania Hospital the record was unusually good, the average mortality for a series of years being 24.3...

It was under such conditions as these that Lister taught and worked, his technique being no better than that of many others. There was this difference, however: he did not believe these conditions inevitable, and he was constantly searching by observation and experiment to find out the cause of the high mortality in all hospitals.

In 1865, while intensely occupied with the study of suppuration, Lister learned from the work of Louis Pasteur that putrefaction was a kind of fermentation caused by the growth of microorganisms and that these microorganisms were present in the dust of the air and responsible for wound infection... In considering the possible methods of eliminating the airborne infections, he chose chemical antiseptics as his means and happened to hit upon carbolic acid first. The first product used was a crude acid known as German creosote, which he tried on a compound fracture. Quoting from one of his papers:

After cleansing the broken limb and squeezing out as far as possible all parts of blood, a piece of calico or lint soaked in undiluted Antiseptic - chemicals that kill germs

Septicemia - blood poisoning brought on by germs in the blood stream

Erysipelas - a type of bacterial infection common in the 19th century

Postmortem - after death

Suppuration - the process of forming pus

Putrefaction - the process of decaying flesh

Fermentation - process of gasses produced by bacteria

Calico - a type of cloth
carbolic acid and held by a pair of forceps, was introduced into the wound and passed freely in all directions in order to destroy the germs that had entered either at the time of the accident or afterwards and might be lurking in deeper parts. …The dressing was then fixed in position by strips of adhesive plaster … for the purpose of soaking up any blood or discharges that might escape. The blood and carbolic acid soon formed a tenacious crust or thick paste which was not removed for several days but its antiseptic properties were renewed from time to time by painting some more of the undiluted carbolic acid on its outer surface…”

… He did not obtain another suitable case for the application of his principle until the spring of 1866. This also was a compound fracture and he wrote his father on May 27:

“It is now eight days since the accident and the patient has been going on exactly as if there were no external wound, that is as if the fracture were a simple one. His appetite, sleep, etc., good, and the limb daily diminishing in size while there is no appearance whatever of any matter forming. Thus a most dangerous accident seems to have been entirely deprived of its dangerous element.”

1. Describe the conditions in hospitals prior to Lister's work. Cite at least two pieces of evidence from the text to justify your description.

2. What portions of Lister's methods as described in his writing, sound similar to modern medicine?

3. What impact of Lister's work can you see in Thomas Eakins The Agnew Clinic?
Use the information in text of Joseph Lister, his Life and Work as well as the details from Thomas Eakins paintings The Gross Clinic and The Agnew Clinic to complete the following activity.

Soldiers Camped at Valley Forge and in Afghanistan
Student Handout B

The experiences of the soldiers in the Continental Army as they camped at Valley Forge from December 1777 - June 1778 are both similar and different to the experiences of soldiers in Afghanistan today. Based on what you know now, would you rather be a soldier in Washington’s army, or today’s military forces in Afghanistan. Provide details from at least 4 of the sources to support your answer.

Poor food - hard lodging - Cold Weather - fatigue - Nasty Cloaths - nasty Cookery - Vomit half my time - smoak'd out my senses - the Devil's in't - I can't Endure it - Why are we sent here to starve and Freeze - ... There comes a bowl of beef soup - full of burnt leaves and dirt, sickish enough to make a Hector spue ...There comes a Soldier, his bare feet are seen thro' his worn out Shoes, his legs nearly naked from the tatter'd remains of an only pair of stockings, his Breeches not sufficient to cover his nakedness, his Shirt hanging in Strings, his hair dishevell'd, his face meagre.

AFGHANISTAN
They told us we were going to fight the Taliban. But it turns out, there is no way to know who is Taliban, or what Taliban is, or what they look like.

A guy will be bringing his kid to your clinic one day, then shooting at you the next. You'll make friends with a kid on an airdrop, then see that kid slit another kid's throat on patrol a week later. There is no "enemy" and no goal. The people don't even understand who you are or why you're there. Many of them believed we were invulnerable demons. One elder tested this theory by sending a small child to try and stab me in the back with a knife, which was made by welding a blade onto an old .50 cal casing. Kids dig up mines, bouncing betty's, and old russian munitions and set them off like firecrackers.

The place is a fed up maelstrom with no conceivable sense of morality, justice, benevolence, or community. Every single person is just trying to survive.

Head Qrs: Valley Forge Dec 29th: 1777 Gent:
I take the liberty of transmitting you the Inclosed Return, which contains a state of the New Hampshire Regiments. By this you will discover how deficient, — how exceedingly short they are of the complement of men which of right according to the establishment they ought to have. This information, I have thought it my duty to lay before you, that it may have that attention which it’s importance demands; and in full hope, that the most early and vigorous measures will be adopted, not only to make the Regiments more respectable but compleat.

There is one thing more to which I would take the liberty of solliciting your most serious and constant attention; to wit, the cloathing of your Troops, and the procuring of every possible supply in your power from time to time for that end... We had in Camp, on the 23rd Inst. by a Field Return then taken, not less than 2898 men unfit for duty, by reason of their being barefoot and otherwise naked.

AFGHANISTAN

"Top US general may seek more troops for Afghanistan"
Tom Vanden Brook, USA Today 11:35pm EST December 29, 2015

WASHINGTON —News from Afghanistan in 2015, when American troops ended their daily combat mission after 14 years, has been grim. Taliban insurgents stormed the northern provincial capital of Kunduz in October and were pushed out after fierce fighting that included an inadvertent attack by a U.S. warplane on hospital that killed 42 civilians... Last week, six U.S. airmen were killed by a suicide bomber outside Bagram Air Base.

"My job as commander on the ground is to continually make assessments," Campbell said. "Every time I've gone to the president and said, 'I need X,' I've been very, very fortunate that he's provided that. So he's been very flexible. It's actually been conditions based as we've gone forward. "If I don't believe that we can accomplish the train, advise and assist and the (counter-terrorism) missions, then I owe it to the senior leadership to come back and say, 'Here's what I need.' If that's more people, it's more people."

Earlier this year, U.S. troops were stretched so thin that they advised their Afghan partners by video conference, Thornberry said. He said he'd rely on commanders for a recommendation on troop levels, adding that they had sought as many as 20,000.

Philadelphia & World Heritage Site Exit Ticket

Student Handout B

1. Which World Heritage Site from today’s tour do you most want to visit in real life and why?

2. Which Philadelphia location do you think people from other countries should visit and why?
The UNESCO’s World Heritage Committee lists ten criteria that they feel defines a World Heritage Site. In order to join the prestigious list of World Heritage Sites a landmark must meet one of the ten criteria. It’s your turn to nominate a Philadelphia Landmark to be a World Heritage Site. Please write a 1-2 page letter to the UNESCO Committee addressing the following items:

Identify the landmark and it’s location
Describe the landmark
Give the history of the landmark
State which of the ten criteria applies to the Landmark Justify why the landmark deserves to be included on the list
UNESCO World Heritage Committee Selection Criteria

Cultural Landmarks:
(i) to represent a masterpiece of human creative genius
(ii) to exhibit an important interchange of human values, over a span of time or within a cultural area of the world, on developments in architecture or technology, monumental arts, town-planning or landscape design;
(iii) to bear a unique or at least exceptional testimony to a cultural tradition or to a civilization which is living or which has disappeared;
(iv) to be an outstanding example of a type of building, architectural or technological ensemble or landscape which illustrates (a) significant stage(s) in human history;
(v) to be an outstanding example of a traditional human settlement, land-use, or sea-use which is representative of a culture (or cultures), or human interaction with the environment especially when it has become vulnerable under the impact of irreversible change;
(vi) to be directly or tangibly associated with events or living traditions, with ideas, or with beliefs, with artistic and literary works of outstanding universal significance. (The Committee considers that this criterion should preferably be used in conjunction with other criteria);

Natural Landmarks:
(vii) to contain superlative natural phenomena or areas of exceptional natural beauty and aesthetic importance;
(viii) to be outstanding examples representing major stages of earth's history, including the record of life, significant on-going geological processes in the development of landforms, or significant geomorphic or physiographic features;
(ix) to be outstanding examples representing significant on-going ecological and biological processes in the evolution and development of terrestrial, freshwater, coastal and marine ecosystems and communities of plants and animals;
(x) to contain the most important and significant natural habitats for in-situ conservation of biological diversity, including those containing threatened species of outstanding universal value from the point of view of science or conservation.

Equal Station

Title of Lesson: Equal Station
Content/Subject Area: US History

Context: The Declaration of Independence is remembered as the beginning of modern democracy. In Philadelphia we are fortunate enough to claim it as our own. The bold preamble declares that not only will American govern its own lands but also that the young country demands “Equal Station” with Britain, a demand that was unheard of at the time. When Thomas Jefferson committed to paper the ideas and sentiments of his fellow members of the Continental Congress, we must wonder if he knew what lasting repercussions his words would have.

Today Jefferson’s words have inspired more than half of the members of the 192 nation UN Assembly to declare independence and assume their equal station on the planet. In 1789 we saw our allies the French with their Declaration of the Rights of Man and the Citizen. African American Soldiers returning home from WWII felt a particular sting of disillusionment and drafted their own 54 item missive to represent the “Negro Peoples of the World”. In 1965 Rhodesia declared their independence from Britain drafting their own document, the Rhodesian Unilateral Declaration of Independence, however they deviated a bit at the end by signing it “God Save the Queen”. In Asia, Thomas Jefferson’s words inspired Ho Chi Minh and resulted in the Declaration of Independence of the Democratic Republic of Vietnam, as he broke his country away from France, our former allies in independence.

Duration: Two 60 minute class periods

Objective: SWBAT compare the Declarations of Independence from other nations IOT determine how the American document influenced the framers of other governments.

Standards:
CCSS.ELA-LITERACY.RH.9-10.4
Determine the meaning of words and phrases as they are used in a text, including vocabulary describing political, social, or economic aspects of history/social science.
CCSS.ELA-LITERACY.RH.9-10.5
Analyze how a text uses structure to emphasize key points or advance an explanation or analysis.

CCSS.ELA-LITERACY.RH.9-10.6

Compare the point of view of two or more authors for how they treat the same or similar topics, including which details they include and emphasize in their respective accounts.

| Anticipatory Set 15 minutes | Day One
Conversation Starter
Ask the students the following question: How do you break up with someone? The question will generate a variety of responses that are both mature and totally ridiculous, but that is a good thing. Using probing questions and follow up discussion guide the students to the realization that a break up has three parts:
1. Telling someone it's over (clearly state that the relationship is over)
2. Listing the reasons why the relationship ended (we fight too much, we are going to different schools next year, you cheated, etc)
3. Explain what will happen next (let's be friends) |
| Instruction Part 1 10 minutes | 1. Distribute Student Handout A to all students
2. Review the SOAP information on Student Handout A regarding the Declaration of Independence to help provide context and background for the students. |
| Instruction Part 2 35 minutes | 1. Distribute Student Handout B.
2. Read the excerpts from the Declaration of Independence with students, pausing to check for understanding frequently.
3. After teacher reads the excerpt and vocabulary definitions, students are to write what they think the excerpt means in their own word in the right column of Student Handout B
4. Use the “Equal Station” Powerpoint to help break down text meaning, new vocabulary words.
5. Tell students that next they will be looking at one of four documents that was inspired by The Declaration of Independence. |
| Instruction Part 3 45 minutes | Day 2
1. Give each student one of the four documents inspired by the Declaration of Independence as well as copies of Student Handout C and D.
2. In groups students will read the document once, following the checklist from Student Handout C as they annotate their text: |

The Declaration of Independence
Philadelphia, 1776

When, in the course of human events, it becomes necessary for one people to dissolve the political bonds which have connected them with another, and to assume among the powers of the earth, the separate and equal station to which the laws of nature and of nature's God entitle them, a decent respect to the opinions of mankind requires that they should declare the causes which impel them to the separation.

We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable rights, that among these are life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness. That to secure these rights, governments are instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed. That whenever any form of government becomes destructive to these ends, it is the right of the people to alter or to abolish it, and to institute new government, laying its foundation on such principles and organizing its powers in such form, as to them shall seem most likely to effect their safety and happiness. Prudence, indeed, will dictate that governments long established should not be changed for light and transient causes; and accordingly all experience hath shown that mankind are more disposed to suffer, while evils are sufferable, than to right themselves by abolishing the forms to which they are accustomed. But when a long train of abuses and usurpations, pursuing invariably the same object evinces a design to reduce them under absolute despotism, it is their right, it is their duty, to throw off such government, and to provide new guards for their future security. --Such has been the patient sufferance of these colonies; and such is now the necessity which constrains them to alter their former systems of government. The history of the present King of Great Britain is a history of repeated injuries and usurpations, all having in direct object the establishment of an absolute tyranny over these states. To prove this, let facts be submitted to a candid world.

1. He has refused his assent to laws, the most wholesome and necessary for the public good.

2. He has forbidden his governors to pass laws of immediate and pressing importance, unless suspended in their operation till his assent should be obtained; and when so suspended, he has utterly neglected to attend to them.

3. He has refused to pass other laws for the accommodation of large districts of people, unless those people would relinquish the right of representation in the legislature, a right inestimable to them and formidable to tyrants only.

4. He has called together legislative bodies at places unusual, uncomfortable, and distant from the depository of their public records, for the sole purpose of fatiguing them into compliance with his measures.
5. He has dissolved representative houses repeatedly, for opposing with manly firmness his invasions on the rights of the people.

6. He has refused for a long time, after such dissolutions, to cause others to be elected; whereby the legislative powers, incapable of annihilation, have returned to the people at large for their exercise; the state remaining in the meantime exposed to all the dangers of invasion from without, and convulsions within.

7. He has endeavored to prevent the population of these states; for that purpose obstructing the laws for naturalization of foreigners; refusing to pass others to encourage their migration hither, and raising the conditions of new appropriations of lands.

8. He has obstructed the administration of justice, by refusing his assent to laws for establishing judiciary powers.

9. He has made judges dependent on his will alone, for the tenure of their offices, and the amount and payment of their salaries.

10. He has erected a multitude of new offices, and sent hither swarms of officers to harass our people, and eat out their substance.

11. He has kept among us, in times of peace, standing armies without the consent of our legislature.

12. He has affected to render the military independent of and superior to civil power.

13. He has combined with others to subject us to a jurisdiction foreign to our constitution, and unacknowledged by our laws; giving his assent to their acts of pretended legislation:

14. For quartering large bodies of armed troops among us:

15. For protecting them, by mock trial, from punishment for any murders which they should commit on the inhabitants of these states:

16. For cutting off our trade with all parts of the world:

17. For imposing taxes on us without our consent:

18. For depriving us in many cases, of the benefits of trial by jury:

19. For transporting us beyond seas to be tried for pretended offenses:
20. For abolishing the free system of English laws in a neighboring province, establishing therein an arbitrary government, and enlarging its boundaries so as to render it at once an example and fit instrument for introducing the same absolute rule in these colonies:

21. For taking away our charters, abolishing our most valuable laws, and altering fundamentally the forms of our governments:

22. For suspending our own legislatures, and declaring themselves invested with power to legislate for us in all cases whatsoever.

23. He has abdicated government here, by declaring us out of his protection and waging war against us.

24. He has plundered our seas, ravaged our coasts, burned our towns, and destroyed the lives of our people.

25. He is at this time transporting large armies of foreign mercenaries to complete the works of death, desolation and tyranny, already begun with circumstances of cruelty and perfidy scarcely paralleled in the most barbarous ages, and totally unworthy the head of a civilized nation.

26. He has constrained our fellow citizens taken captive on the high seas to bear arms against their country, to become the executioners of their friends and brethren, or to fall themselves by their hands.

27. He has excited domestic insurrections amongst us, and has endeavored to bring on the inhabitants of our frontiers, the merciless Indian savages, whose known rule of warfare, is undistinguished destruction of all ages, sexes and conditions.

In every stage of these oppressions we have petitioned for redress in the most humble terms: our repeated petitions have been answered only by repeated injury. A prince, whose character is thus marked by every act which may define a tyrant, is unfit to be the ruler of a free people.

Nor have we been wanting in attention to our British brethren. We have warned them from time to time of attempts by their legislature to extend an unwarrantable jurisdiction over us. We have reminded them of the circumstances of our emigration and settlement here. We have appealed to their native justice and magnanimity, and we have conjured them by the ties of our common kindred to disavow these usurpations, which, would inevitably interrupt our connections and correspondence. They too have been deaf to the voice of justice and of consanguinity. We must, therefore, acquiesce in the necessity, which denounces our separation, and hold them, as we hold the rest of mankind, enemies in war, in peace friends.
We, therefore, the representatives of the United States of America, in General Congress, assembled, appealing to the Supreme Judge of the world for the rectitude of our intentions, do, in the name, and by the authority of the good people of these colonies, solemnly publish and declare, that these united colonies are, and of right ought to be free and independent states; that they are absolved from all allegiance to the British Crown, and that all political connection between them and the state of Great Britain, is and ought to be totally dissolved; and that as free and independent states, they have full power to levy war, conclude peace, contract alliances, establish commerce, and to do all other acts and things which independent states may of right do. And for the support of this declaration, with a firm reliance on the protection of Divine Providence, we mutually pledge to each other our lives, our fortunes and our sacred honor.
“Declaration of the Rights of the Negro Peoples of the World”: The Principles of the Universal Negro Improvement Association

Preamble

Be It Resolved, That the Negro people of the world, through their chosen representatives in convention assembled in Liberty Hall, in the City of New York and United States of America, from August 1 to August 31, in the year of Our Lord one thousand nine hundred and twenty, protest against the wrongs and injustices they are suffering at the hands of their white brethren, and state what they deem their fair and just rights, as well as the treatment they propose to demand of all men in the future.

We complain:
1. That nowhere in the world, with few exceptions, are black men accorded equal treatment with white men, although in the same situation and circumstances, but, on the contrary, are discriminated against and denied the common rights due to human beings for no other reason than their race and color.

We are not willingly accepted as guests in the public hotels and inns of the world for no other reason than our race and color.

2. In certain parts of the United States of America our race is denied the right of public trial accorded to other races when accused of crime, but are lynched and burned by mobs, and such brutal and inhuman treatment is even practiced upon our women.

3. That European nations have parcelled out among them and taken possession of nearly all of the continent of Africa, and the natives are compelled to surrender their lands to aliens and are treated in most instances like slaves.

4. In the southern portion of the United States of America, although citizens under the Federal Constitution, and in some States almost equal to the whites in population and are qualified land owners and taxpayers, we are, nevertheless, denied all voice in the making and administration of the laws and are taxed without representation by the State governments, and at the same time compelled to do military service in defense of the country.
5. On the public conveyances and common carriers in the southern portion of the United States we are jim-crowed and compelled to accept separate and inferior accommodations and made to pay the same fare charged for first-class accommodations, and our families are often humiliated and insulted by drunken white men who habitually pass through the jim-crow cars going to the smoking car.

6. The physicians of our race are denied the right to attend their patients while in the public hospitals of the cities and States where they reside in certain parts of the United States.

Our children are forced to attend inferior separate schools for shorter terms than white children, and the public school funds are unequally divided between the white and colored schools.

7. We are discriminated against and denied an equal chance to earn wages for the support of our families, and in many instances are refused admission into labor unions and nearly everywhere are paid smaller wages than white men.

8. In the Civil Service and departmental offices we are everywhere discriminated against and made to feel that to be a black man in Europe, America and the West Indies is equivalent to being an outcast and a leper among the races of men, no matter what the character attainments of the black men may be.

9. In the British and other West Indian islands and colonies Negroes are secretly and cunningly discriminated against and denied those fuller rights of government to which white citizens are appointed, nominated and elected.

10. That our people in those parts are forced to work for lower wages than the average standard of white men and are kept in conditions repugnant to good civilized tastes and customs.

11. That the many acts of injustices against members of our race before the courts of law in the respective islands and colonies are of such nature as to create disgust and disrespect for the white man’s sense of justice.

12. Against all such inhuman, unchristian and uncivilized treatment we here and now emphatically protest, and invoke the condemnation of all mankind.
In order to encourage our race all over the world and to stimulate it to overcome the handicaps and difficulties surrounding it, and to push forward to a higher and grander destiny, we demand and insist on the following Declaration of Rights:

1. Be it known to all men that whereas all men are created equal and entitled to the rights of life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness, and because of this we, the duly elected representatives of the Negro peoples of the world, invoking the aid of the just and Almighty God, do declare all men, women and children of our blood throughout the world free denizens, and do claim them as free citizens of Africa, the Motherland of all Negroes.

2. That we believe in the supreme authority of our race in all things racial; that all things are created and given to man as a common possession; that there should be an equitable distribution and apportionment of all such things, and in consideration of the fact that as a race we are now deprived of those things that are morally and legally ours, we believed it right that all such things should be acquired and held by whatsoever means possible.

3. That we believe the Negro, like any other race, should be governed by the ethics of civilization, and therefore should not be deprived of any of those rights or privileges common to other human beings.

4. We declare that Negroes, wheresoever they form a community among themselves should be given the right to elect their own representatives to represent them in Legislatures, courts of law, or such institutions as may exercise control over that particular community.

5. We assert that the Negro is entitled to even-handed justice before all courts of law and equity in whatever country he may be found, and when this is denied him on account of his race or color such denial is an insult to the race as a whole and should be resented by the entire body of Negroes.

6. We declare it unfair and prejudicial to the rights of Negroes in communities where they exist in considerable numbers to be tried by a judge and jury composed entirely of an alien race, but in all such cases members of our race are entitled to representation on the jury.
7. We believe that any law or practice that tends to deprive any African of his land or the privileges of free citizenship within his country is unjust and immoral, and no native should respect any such law or practice.

8. We declare taxation without representation unjust and tyrannous, and there should be no obligation on the part of the Negro to obey the levy of a tax by any law-making body from which he is excluded and denied representation on account of his race and color.

9. We believe that any law especially directed against the Negro to his detriment and singling him out because of his race or color is unfair and immoral, and should not be respected.

10. We believe all men entitled to common human respect and that our race should in no way tolerate any insults that may be interpreted to mean disrespect to our race or color.

11. We deprecate the use of the term “nigger” as applied to Negroes, and demand that the word “Negro” be written with a capital “N.”

12. We believe that the Negro should adopt every means to protect himself against barbarous practices inflicted upon him because of color.

13. We believe in the freedom of Africa for the Negro people of the world, and by the principle of Europe for the Europeans and Asia for the Asiatics, we also demand Africa for the Africans at home and abroad.

14. We believe in the inherent right of the Negro to possess himself of Africa and that his possession of same shall not be regarded as an infringement of any claim or purchase made by any race or nation.

15. We strongly condemn the cupidity of those nations of the world who, by open aggression or secret schemes, have seized the territories and inexhaustible natural wealth of Africa, and we place on record our most solemn determination to reclaim the treasures and possession of the vast continent of our forefathers.

16. We believe all men should live in peace one with the other, but when races and nations provoke the ire of other races and nations by attempting to infringe upon their rights[,] war becomes inevitable, and the attempt in any way to free one's self or protect one's rights or heritage becomes justifiable.
17. Whereas the lynching, by burning, hanging or any other means, of human beings is a barbarous practice and a shame and disgrace to civilization, we therefore declare any country guilty of such atrocities outside the pale of civilization.
18. We protest against the atrocious crime of whipping, flogging and overworking of the native tribes of Africa and Negroes everywhere. These are methods that should be abolished and all means should be taken to prevent a continuance of such brutal practices.
19. We protest against the atrocious practice of shaving the heads of Africans, especially of African women or individuals of Negro blood, when placed in prison as a punishment for crime by an alien race.
10. We protest against segregated districts, separate public conveyances, industrial discrimination, lynchings and limitations of political privileges of any Negro citizen in any part of the world on account of race, color or creed, and will exert our full influence and power against all such.
21. We protest against any punishment inflicted upon a Negro with severity, as against lighter punishment inflicted upon another of an alien race for like offense, as an act of prejudice and injustice, and should be resented by the entire race.
22. We protest against the system of education in any country where Negroes are denied the same privileges and advantages as other races.
23. We declare it inhuman and unfair to boycott Negroes from industries and labor in any part of the world.
24. We believe in the doctrine of the freedom of the press, and we therefore emphatically protest against the suppression of Negro newspapers and periodicals in various parts of the world, and call upon Negroes everywhere to employ all available means to prevent such suppression.
25. We further demand free speech universally for all men.
26. We hereby protest against the publication of scandalous and inflammatory articles by an alien press tending to create racial strife and the exhibition of picture films showing the Negro as a cannibal.

27. We believe in the self-determination of all peoples.

28. We declare for the freedom of religious worship.

29. With the help of Almighty God we declare ourselves the sworn protectors of the honor and virtue of our women and children, and pledge our lives for their protection and defense everywhere and under all circumstances from wrongs and outrages.

30. We demand the right of an unlimited and unprejudiced education for ourselves and our posterity forever.

31. We declare that the teaching in any school by alien teachers to our boys and girls, that the alien race is superior to the Negro race, is an insult to the Negro people of the world.

32. Where Negroes form a part of the citizenry of any country, and pass the civil service examination of such country, we declare them entitled to the same consideration as other citizens as to appointments in such civil service.

33. We vigorously protest against the increasingly unfair and unjust treatment accorded Negro travelers on land and sea by the agents and employee of railroad and steamship companies, and insist that for equal fare we receive equal privileges with travelers of other races.

34. We declare it unjust for any country, State or nation to enact laws tending to hinder and obstruct the free immigration of Negroes on account of their race and color.

35. That the right of the Negro to travel unmolested throughout the world be not abridged by any person or persons, and all Negroes are called upon to give aid to a fellow Negro when thus molested.

36. We declare that all Negroes are entitled to the same right to travel over the world as other men.

37. We hereby demand that the governments of the world recognize our leader and his representatives chosen by the race to look after the welfare of our people under such governments.
38. We demand complete control of our social institutions without interference by any alien race or races.

39. That the colors, Red, Black and Green, be the colors of the Negro race.

40. Resolved, That the anthem “Ethiopia, Thou Land of Our Fathers etc.,” shall be the anthem of the Negro race. . . .

41. We believe that any limited liberty which deprives one of the complete rights and prerogatives of full citizenship is but a modified form of slavery.

42. We declare it an injustice to our people and a serious Impediment to the health of the race to deny to competent licensed Negro physicians the right to practice in the public hospitals of the communities in which they reside, for no other reason than their race and color.

43. We call upon the various government[s] of the world to accept and acknowledge Negro representatives who shall be sent to the said governments to represent the general welfare of the Negro peoples of the world.

44. We deplore and protest against the practice of confining juvenile prisoners in prisons with adults, and we recommend that such youthful prisoners be taught gainful trades under human[e] supervision.

45. Be it further resolved, That we as a race of people declare the League of Nations null and void as far as the Negro is concerned, in that it seeks to deprive Negroes of their liberty.

46. We demand of all men to do unto us as we would do unto them, in the name of justice; and we cheerfully accord to all men all the rights we claim herein for ourselves.

47. We declare that no Negro shall engage himself in battle for an alien race without first obtaining the consent of the leader of the Negro people of the world, except in a matter of national self-defense.

48. We protest against the practice of drafting Negroes and sending them to war with alien forces without proper training, and demand in all cases that Negro soldiers be given the same training as the aliens.

49. We demand that instructions given Negro children in schools include the subject of “Negro History,” to their benefit.
50. We demand a free and unfettered commercial intercourse with all the Negro people of the world.

51. We declare for the absolute freedom of the seas for all peoples.

52. We demand that our duly accredited representatives be given proper recognition in all leagues, conferences, conventions or courts of international arbitration wherever human rights are discussed.

53. We proclaim the 31st day of August of each year to be an international holiday to be observed by all Negroes.

54. We want all men to know that we shall maintain and contend for the freedom and equality of every man, woman and child of our race, with our lives, our fortunes and our sacred honor.

These rights we believe to be justly ours and proper for the protection of the Negro race at large, and because of this belief we, on behalf of the four hundred million Negroes of the world, do pledge herein the sacred blood of the race in defense, and we hereby subscribe our names as a guarantee of the truthfulness and faithfulness hereof, in the presence of Almighty God, on this 13th day of August, in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and twenty.
Declaration of the Rights of Man - 1789

Approved by the National Assembly of France, August 26, 1789

The representatives of the French people, organized as a National Assembly, believing that the ignorance, neglect, or contempt of the rights of man are the sole cause of public calamities and of the corruption of governments, have determined to set forth in a solemn declaration the natural, unalienable, and sacred rights of man, in order that this declaration, being constantly before all the members of the Social body, shall remind them continually of their rights and duties; in order that the acts of the legislative power, as well as those of the executive power, may be compared at any moment with the objects and purposes of all political institutions and may thus be more respected, and, lastly, in order that the grievances of the citizens, based hereafter upon simple and incontestable principles, shall tend to the maintenance of the constitution and redound to the happiness of all. Therefore the National Assembly recognizes and proclaims, in the presence and under the auspices of the Supreme Being, the following rights of man and of the citizen:

Articles:

1. Men are born and remain free and equal in rights. Social distinctions may be founded only upon the general good.

2. The aim of all political association is the preservation of the natural and imprescriptible rights of man. These rights are liberty, property, security, and resistance to oppression.

3. The principle of all sovereignty resides essentially in the nation. No body nor individual may exercise any authority which does not proceed directly from the nation.

4. Liberty consists in the freedom to do everything which injures no one else; hence the exercise of the natural rights of each man has no limits except those which assure to the other members of the society the enjoyment of the same rights. These limits can only be determined by law.

5. Law can only prohibit such actions as are hurtful to society. Nothing may be prevented which is not forbidden by law, and no one may be forced to do anything not provided for by law.

6. Law is the expression of the general will. Every citizen has a right to participate personally, or through his representative, in its foundation. It must be the same for all, whether it protects or punishes. All citizens, being equal in the eyes of the law, are equally eligible to all dignities and to all public positions and occupations, according to their abilities, and without distinction except that of their virtues and talents.
7. No person shall be accused, arrested, or imprisoned except in the cases and according to the forms prescribed by law. Any one soliciting, transmitting, executing, or causing to be executed, any arbitrary order, shall be punished. But any citizen summoned or arrested in virtue of the law shall submit without delay, as resistance constitutes an offense.

8. The law shall provide for such punishments only as are strictly and obviously necessary, and no one shall suffer punishment except it be legally inflicted in virtue of a law passed and promulgated before the commission of the offense.

9. As all persons are held innocent until they shall have been declared guilty, if arrest shall be deemed indispensable, all harshness not essential to the securing of the prisoner's person shall be severely repressed by law.

10. No one shall be disquieted on account of his opinions, including his religious views, provided their manifestation does not disturb the public order established by law.

11. The free communication of ideas and opinions is one of the most precious of the rights of man. Every citizen may, accordingly, speak, write, and print with freedom, but shall be responsible for such abuses of this freedom as shall be defined by law.

12. The security of the rights of man and of the citizen requires public military forces. These forces are, therefore, established for the good of all and not for the personal advantage of those to whom they shall be intrusted.

13. A common contribution is essential for the maintenance of the public forces and for the cost of administration. This should be equitably distributed among all the citizens in proportion to their means.

14. All the citizens have a right to decide, either personally or by their representatives, as to the necessity of the public contribution; to grant this freely; to know to what uses it is put; and to fix the proportion, the mode of assessment and of collection and the duration of the taxes.

15. Society has the right to require of every public agent an account of his administration.

16. A society in which the observance of the law is not assured, nor the separation of powers defined, has no constitution at all.

17. Since property is an inviolable and sacred right, no one shall be deprived thereof except where public necessity, legally determined, shall clearly demand it, and then only on condition that the owner shall have been previously and equitably indemnified.
Declaration of Independence of the Democratic Republic of Vietnam

All men are created equal. They are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights, among them are Life, Liberty, and the pursuit of Happiness."

This immortal statement was made in the Declaration of Independence of the United States of America in 1776. In a broader sense, this means: All the peoples on the earth are equal from birth, all the peoples have a right to live, to be happy and free.

The Declaration of the French Revolution made in 1791 on the Rights of Man and the Citizen also states: “All men are born free and with equal rights, and must always remain free and have equal rights.”

Those are undeniable truths.

Nevertheless, for more than eighty years, the French imperialists, abusing the standard of Liberty, Equality, and Fraternity, have violated our Fatherland and oppressed our fellow-citizens. They have acted contrary to the ideals of humanity and justice.

In the field of politics, they have deprived our people of every democratic liberty.

They have enforced inhuman laws; they have set up three distinct political regimes in the North, the Center and the South of Vietnam in order to wreck our national unity and prevent our people from being united.

They have built more prisons than schools. They have mercilessly slain our patriots; they have drowned our uprisings in rivers of blood.

They have fettered public opinion; they have practiced obscurantism against our people.

To weaken our race they have forced us to use opium and alcohol.

In the field of economics, they have fleeced us to the backbone, impoverished our people, and devastated our land.

They have robbed us of our rice fields, our mines, our forests, and our raw materials. They have monopolized the issuing of bank-notes and the export trade.
They have invented numerous unjustifiable taxes and reduced our people, especially our peasantry, to a state of extreme poverty.

They have hampered the prospering of our national bourgeoisie; they have mercilessly exploited our workers.

In the autumn of 1940, when the Japanese Fascists violated Indochina’s territory to establish new bases in their fight against the Allies, the French imperialists went down on their bended knees and handed over our country to them.

Thus, from that date, our people were subjected to the double yoke of the French and the Japanese. Their sufferings and miseries increased. The result was that from the end of last year to the beginning of this year, from Quang Tri province to the North of Vietnam, more than two million of our fellow-citizens died from starvation. On March 9, the French troops were disarmed by the Japanese. The French colonialists either fled or surrendered showing that not only were they incapable of “protecting” us, but that, in the span of five years, they had twice sold our country to the Japanese.

On several occasions before March 9, the Vietminh League urged the French to ally themselves with it against the Japanese. Instead of agreeing to this proposal, the French colonialists so intensified their terrorist activities against the Vietminh members that before fleeing they massacred a great number of our political prisoners detained at Yen Bay and Caobang.

Notwithstanding all this, our fellow-citizens have always manifested toward the French a tolerant and humane attitude. Even after the Japanese putsch of March 1945, the Vietminh League helped many Frenchmen to cross the frontier, rescued some of them from Japanese jails, and protected French lives and property.

From the autumn of 1940, our country had in fact ceased to be a French colony and had become a Japanese possession.

After the Japanese had surrendered to the Allies, our whole people rose to regain our national sovereignty and to found the Democratic Republic of Vietnam.
The truth is that we have wrested our independence from the Japanese and not from the French.

The French have fled, the Japanese have capitulated, Emperor Bao Dai has abdicated. Our people have broken the chains which for nearly a century have fettered them and have won independence for the Fatherland. Our people at the same time have overthrown the monarchic regime that has reigned supreme for dozens of centuries. In its place has been established the present Democratic Republic.

For these reasons, we, members of the Provisional Government, representing the whole Vietnamese people, declare that from now on we break off all relations of a colonial character with France; we repeal all the international obligation that France has so far subscribed to on behalf of Vietnam and we abolish all the special rights the French have unlawfully acquired in our Fatherland.

The whole Vietnamese people, animated by a common purpose, are determined to fight to the bitter end against any attempt by the French colonialists to reconquer their country.

We are convinced that the Allied nations which at Tehran and San Francisco have acknowledged the principles of self-determination and equality of nations, will not refuse to acknowledge the independence of Vietnam.

A people who have courageously opposed French domination for more than eight years, a people who have fought side by side with the Allies against the Fascists during these last years, such a people must be free and independent.

For these reasons, we, members of the Provisional Government of the Democratic Republic of Vietnam, solemnly declare to the world that Vietnam has the right to be a free and independent country—and in fact is so already. The entire Vietnamese people are determined to mobilize all their physical and mental strength, to sacrifice their lives and property in order to safeguard their independence and liberty.

Rhodesia’s Unilateral Declaration of Independence

Whereas in the course of human affairs history has shown that it may become necessary for a people to resolve the political affiliations which have connected them with another people and to assume amongst other nations the separate and equal status to which they are entitled:

And Whereas in such event a respect for the opinions of mankind requires them to declare to other nations the causes which impel them to assume full responsibility for their own affairs:

Now Therefore, We, The Government of Rhodesia, Do Hereby Declare:

That it is an indisputable and accepted historic fact that since 1923 the Government of Rhodesia have exercised the powers of self-government and have been responsible for the progress, development and welfare of their people;

That the people of Rhodesia having demonstrated their loyalty to the Crown and to their kith and kin in the United Kingdom and elsewhere through two world wars, and having been prepared to shed their blood and give of their substance in what they believed to be the mutual interests of freedom-loving people, now see all that they have cherished about to be shattered on the rocks of expediency;

That the people of Rhodesia have witnessed a process which is destructive of those very precepts upon which civilization in a primitive country has been built, they have seen the principles of Western democracy, responsible government and moral standards crumble elsewhere, nevertheless they have remained steadfast;

That the people of Rhodesia fully support the requests of their government for sovereign independence but have witnessed the consistent refusal of the Government of the United Kingdom to accede to their entreaties;

That the Government of the United Kingdom have thus demonstrated that they are not prepared to grant sovereign independence to Rhodesia on terms acceptable to the people of Rhodesia, thereby persisting in maintaining an unwarrantable jurisdiction over Rhodesia, obstructing laws and treaties with other states and the conduct of affairs with other nations and refusing assent to laws necessary for the public good, all this to the detriment of the future peace, prosperity and good government of Rhodesia;

That the Government of Rhodesia have for a long period patiently and in good faith negotiated with the Government of the United Kingdom for the removal of the remaining limitations placed upon them and for the grant of sovereign independence;

That in the belief that procrastination and delay strike at and injure the very life of the nation, the Government of Rhodesia consider it essential that Rhodesia should attain, without delay, sovereign independence, the justice of which is beyond question;

Now Therefore, We The Government of Rhodesia, in humble submission to Almighty God who controls the destinies of nations, conscious that the people of Rhodesia have always shown unswerving loyalty and devotion to Her Majesty the Queen and earnestly praying that we and the people of Rhodesia will not be hindered in our determination to continue exercising our undoubted right to demonstrate the same loyalty and devotion, and seeking to promote the common good so that the dignity and freedom of all men may be assured, Do, By This Proclamation, adopt, enact and give to the people of Rhodesia the Constitution annexed hereto;

God Save The Queen

<td>In modern society, children are often seen as a sacred protected class. That has not always been the case. Philadelphia’s reputation as an industrial revolution powerhouse city, meant that children often worked difficult and dangerous jobs for very little pay. The infamous labor crusader Mother Jones once organized the working children of the city in a 100 mile march to end child labor. Though unsuccessful at achieving that goal, she nonetheless made a significant impact. This lesson has students comparing the plight of Philadelphia child workers to modern child soldiers around the world and imagining Mother Jones reaction, if she were alive today.</td>

The Great Philadelphia Textile Strike of 1903

The Central Textile Workers Union of Philadelphia held a meeting the evening of May 27, 1903. A vote was taken and a general strike call was issued. That general strike eventually caused 100,000 textile workers to go out on strike in the Philadelphia area. 16,000 of those were children under the age of 16, some as young as 8 or 9 years of age. The textile industry of the day employed children at a higher rate than any other industry. The number given from the 1900 census was 80,000. In cotton textiles, they made up 13.1% of the work force, and that rate reached 30% in the South.

The Central Textile Workers' Union issued this statement:

“Thirty-six trades, representing 90,000 people, ask the employers to reduce working hours from sixty to fifty-five hours a week. They are willing that wages be reduced accordingly. They strike for lower wages in an effort to get shorter hours.

Three trades, representing 10,000 people, ask for the same reduction in working hours, but, in addition, they ask for the same weekly wages or a slight increase, averaging ten per cent.

The request for shorter hours is made primarily for the sake of the children and women. For six years the organized textile workers of Philadelphia have been trying in vain to persuade the politician-controlled Legislature of Pennsylvania to pass a law which would reduce the working hours of children and women and stop them from doing night work.”
Average wages for adults for 60 hours of work were $13. Children working 60 hours(!) got $2.

On Monday June 1st, at least 90,000 textile workers went out on strike in the Philadelphia area. Of the 600 mills in the city, about 550 were idle. Philadelphia now had more workers out on strike than at any other time in her history. Several thousand workers had already been on strike before the textile strike began, including: the carriage and wagon builders, and the carpenters along with others working in the building trades. It appeared that the city would be in for a long hot summer.

By the next day, Tuesday, the strike spread to the hosiery mills, increasing the army of idle workers by 8,000. Most of these were women and children employed in the Kensington district. This class of workers was unorganized, but they decided to join the ranks of the unionist in other branches of the textile trade as they witnessed the magnitude of the fight for a shorter work week. The Manufacturers vowed they would not submit to the union demands even if they had to shut down their factories indefinitely.

Mother Jones in Philadelphia

By June 17th, Mother Jones was in Philadelphia ready to lend her assistance to the fight. Mother considered child labor to be the worst of the industrial sins. She later described what she witnessed in Philadelphia:

“Every day little children came into Union Headquarters, some with their hands off, some with the thumb missing, some with their fingers off at the knuckle. They were stooped little things, round shouldered and skinny. Many of them were not over ten years of age, although the state law prohibited their working before they were twelve [actually, 13] years of age.

The law was poorly enforced and the mothers of these children often swore falsely as to their children’s age. In a single block in Kensington, fourteen women, mothers... of twenty-two children all under twelve, explained it was a question of starvation or perjury. That the fathers had been killed or maimed at the mines.”

On Thursday June 18th, 30,000 textile strikers marched to City Hall. They marched through the city of Philadelphia with Mother Jones in the lead, a little girl striker on each side of her. The streets were full of banners and signs:

We want justice!

We want to go to school!

We want time to eat our meals and think!

Mother later described her speech::

“I put the little boys with their fingers off and hands crushed and maimed on a platform. I held up their mutilated hands and showed them to the crowd and made the statement that Philadelphia’s mansions were built on the broken bones, the quivering hearts and drooping heads of these children. That their little lives went out to make wealth for others. That neither state or city officials paid any attention to these wrongs. That they did not care that these children were to be the future citizens of the nation.

The officials of the city hall were standing in the open windows. I held the little ones of the mills high up above the heads of the crowd and pointed to their puny arms and legs and hollow chests. They were light to lift.

I called upon the millionaire manufacturers to cease their moral murders, and I cried to the officials in the open windows opposite, ‘Some day the workers will take possession of your city hall, and when we do, no child will be sacrificed on the altar of profit.’
The officials quickly closed the windows, just as they had closed their eyes and hearts.”

The Children's Crusade Begins

John Spargo, editor of The Comrade was in Philadelphia assisting Mother Jones with her efforts to aid the strikers. Both were frustrated that there was little press coverage of the strike. Efforts to raise money for the strikers had been disappointing, and the strikers' relief fund was running low. Mother Jones later describe the reason for the lack of publicity:

“I asked the newspaper men why they didn't publish the facts about child labor in Pennsylvania. They said they couldn't because the mill owners had stock in the papers. 'Well, I've got stock in these little children,' said I, 'and I'll arrange a little publicity.'”

The national tour of the Liberty Bell gave Mother the idea to arrange a tour for the little children who were striking for "some of the freedom of childhood." And Mother Jones made plans to leave from Kensington with an "army" of 300 men, women, and children, heading east.

On Tuesday July 7th at 11 o'clock in the morning, Mother Jones began what came to be called "The Children's Crusade." Starting from the Kensington Labor Lyceum, she led her "Industrial Army" out of Kensington toward the northeastern Philadelphia neighborhood of Torresdale where they would camped for the night. The army was accompanied by fifes and drums, American flags, and union banners.

Before leaving Kensington, Mother gave an interview to the North American where she explained her reasons for undertaking the Children's Crusade:

“The sight of little children at work in mills when they ought to be at school or at play always rouses me. I found the conditions in this city deplorable, and I resolved to do what I could to shorten the hours of toil of the striking textile workers so as to gain more liberty for the children and women. I led a parade of children through the city-the cradle of Liberty-but the citizens were not moved to pity by the object lesson
The curse of greed so pressed on their hearts that they could not pause to express their pity for future men and women who are being stunted mentally, morally, and physically, so that they cannot possibly become good citizens. I cannot believe that the public conscience is so callous that it will not respond. I am going out of Philadelphia to see if there are people with human blood in their veins.

I am going to picture capitalism and caricature the money-mad. I am going to show Wall Street the flesh and blood from which it squeezes its wealth. I am going to show President Roosevelt the poor little things on which the boasted commercial greatness of our country is built. Not one single Philadelphia minister of Christ's Gospel has so much as touched on the textile strike in this city. I shall endeavor to arouse sleeping Christians to a sense of their duty towards the poor little ones.

Understand me, I do not blame the manufacturers individually. They are, I repeat, victims of the competitive system. But I do blame society for allowing such evils to exist and to grow without an effort to destroy them. God help the nation if something is not done for a day of reckoning will surely come and with it bloody revolution.”

1. What were the goals of the Central Textile Workers Union of Philadelphia strike?

2. Why did parents lie about their children’s ages so that they could work?

3. Why did Mother Jones select maimed children for her march at City Hall in Philadelphia?

4. Who does Mother Jones blame for child labor injustices?

5. What do you think is the biggest injustice facing Philadelphia’s children today?
Geneva Declaration of the Rights of the Child

Adopted 26 September, 1924, League of Nations

1. The child must be given the means requisite for its normal development, both materially and spiritually.

2. The child that is hungry must be fed, the child that is sick must be nursed, the child that is backward must be helped, the delinquent child must be reclaimed, and the orphan and the waif must be sheltered and succoured.

3. The child must be the first to receive relief in times of distress.

4. The child must be put in a position to earn a livelihood, and must be protected against every form of exploitation.

5. The child must be brought up in the consciousness that its talents must be devoted to the service of its fellow men.

"I am now 14. I was with the LURD for two years in 2003 and 2004. I had to tow ammunition and arms for them. They beat me. They did not feed me. I didn't participate in DD (sic) because I did not know it was an option for me." Esther, former member of Liberians United for Reconciliation and Development.

Sudan

"I joined the SPLA when I was 13. I am from Bahr Al Ghazal. They demobilized me in 2001 and took me to Rumbek, but I was given no demobilization documents. Now, I am stuck here because my family was killed in a government attack and because the SPLA would re-recruit me. At times I wonder why I am not going back to SPLA, half of my friends have and they seem to be better off than me."

- Boy interviewed by Coalition staff, southern Sudan, February 2004.

Uganda

"Sometimes in the bush, the rebels would beat us without mercy whether you made a mistake or not. We would also be made to carry heavy loads on our heads for long distances and made to assemble out in the cold each day as early as 5am." Boy, aged 15, abducted by the LRA

Uganda
"I feel pain from the rape, as if I have wounds inside, and I am afraid I have a disease. I would like to get tested but there is no one to help me. I was tested in the reception centre in Gulu, but I was never told the result. The doctor said that it is better not to know the result." Girl aged 17, abducted by the LRA.

Zimbabwe
"There was no one in charge of the dormitories and on a nightly basis we were raped. The men and youths would come into our dormitory in the dark, and they would just rape us - you would just have a man on top of you, and you could not even see who it was. If we cried afterwards, we were beaten with hosepipes. We were so scared that we did not report the rapes. The youngest girl in our group was aged 11 and she was raped repeatedly in the base."
- 19-year-old girl describing her experience in the National Youth Service Training Program.

Myanmar (Burma)
"They filled the forms and asked my age, and when I said 16 I was slapped and he said, 'You are 18. Answer 18'. He asked me again and I said, 'But that's my true age'. The sergeant asked, 'Then why did you enlist in the army?' I said, 'Against my will. I was captured.' He said, 'Okay, keep your mouth shut then,' and he filled in the form. I just wanted to go back home and I told them, but they refused. I said, 'Then please let me make one phone call,' but they refused that too."
- Maung Zaw Oo, describing the second time he was forced into the Tatmadaw Kyi (army) in 2005.
Nepal

"They (the army) took us to the barracks. They beat us both with their guns and boots. After 15 days my friend died from the beatings. They beat me repeatedly. Once I was beaten unconscious and taken to the hospital. When I regained consciousness I was taken back to the barracks and beaten again. I nearly died. I don't know why they beat me." Ram, recruited in 2004 by the Maoists when he was 14 years old describes his capture by the Royal Nepal Army one year later.

Colombia

"They give you a gun and you have to kill the best friend you have. They do it to see if they can trust you. If you don't kill him, your friend will be ordered to kill you. I had to do it because otherwise I would have been killed. That's why I got out. I couldn't stand it any longer."
- 17-year-old boy, joined paramilitary group aged 7, when a street child.

For each quote write down a short phrase that caught your attention:

After viewing all of them, respond to the following questions:

1. What emotions do you have while reading these quotes?

2. How would you react in a similar situation?

3. What would Mother Jones think about children being used as Child Soldiers?

4. How can we help the children of the world in this situation?
Given what we know about Mother Jones, she would be furious to see children being used in military efforts. Write a two paragraph letter to her about this subject.

➔ Paragraph One: Introduce the problem. Give her a detailed account of the WHO, WHAT, WHERE, WHEN, and WHY of the situation. Include quotes from the children.

➔ Paragraph Two: Explain HOW you think she can help. Give ideas for anti child solidier campaigns. Ideas include a march, protests, letters to government officials, etc.

Dear Mother Jones,

<td>Though women make up 50 percent of the population, history has shown women to be repeatedly oppressed by governments and societal institutions. In 1848 women's rights activists, including Philadelphia’s own Lucretia Mott, assembled in Seneca Falls to declare American feminine independence. The resulting document, known as the Declaration of Sentiments, borrows heavily from Thomas Jefferson and the Declaration of Independence, albeit with a much cheekier undertone. Though women still had to wait another 70 years to vote, the document provided guidance to the movement and demonstrated a united front between men and women, with 68 female and 32 male signatures. Elsewhere in the world today women, like those in Iran, are claiming their independence in a more modern way: through social media. My Stealthy Freedom is a site that allows women in Iran to shake off the shackles of the country’s strict dress code and share their true selves and identities. This controversial site is allowing women a sense of freedom that would make Lucretia Mott quite happy.</td>

Cartoon by Malcolm Evans
Declaration of Sentiments

When, in the course of human events, it becomes necessary for one portion of the family of man to assume among the people of the earth a position different from that which they have hitherto occupied, but one to which the laws of nature and of nature’s God entitle them, a decent respect to the opinions of mankind requires that they should declare the causes that impel them to such a course.

We hold these truths to be self-evident: that all men and women are created equal; that they are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights; that among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness; that to secure these rights governments are instituted, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed. Whenever any form of Government becomes destructive of these ends, it is the right of those who suffer from it to refuse allegiance to it, and to insist upon the institution of a new government, laying its foundation on such principles, and organizing its powers in such form as to them shall seem most likely to effect their safety and happiness. Prudence, indeed, will dictate that governments long established should not be changed for light and transient causes; and accordingly, all experience hath shown that mankind are more disposed to suffer, while evils are sufferable, than to right themselves by abolishing the forms to which they are accustomed. But when a long train of abuses and usurpations, pursuing invariably the same object, evinces a design to reduce them under absolute despotism, it is their duty to throw off such government, and to provide new guards for their future security. Such has been the patient sufferance of the women under this government, and such is now the necessity which constrains them to demand the equal station to which they are entitled.

The history of mankind is a history of repeated injuries and usurpations on the part of man toward woman, having in direct object the establishment of an absolute tyranny over her. To prove this, let facts be submitted to a candid world.

He has never permitted her to exercise her inalienable right to the elective franchise.

He has compelled her to submit to laws, in the formation of which she had no voice.

He has withheld from her rights which are given to the most ignorant and degraded men—both natives and foreigners.

Having deprived her of this first right of a citizen, the elective franchise, thereby leaving her without representation in the halls of legislation, he has oppressed her on all sides.
He has made her, if married, in the eye of the law, civilly dead.

He has taken from her all right in property, even to the wages she earns.

He has made her, morally, an irresponsible being, as she can commit many crimes with impunity, provided they be done in the presence of her husband. In the covenant of marriage, she is compelled to promise obedience to her husband, he becoming, to all intents and purposes, her master—the law giving him power to deprive her of her liberty, and to administer chastisement.

He has so framed the laws of divorce, as to what shall be the proper causes of divorce; in case of separation, to whom the guardianship of the children shall be given; as to be wholly regardless of the happiness of women—the law, in all cases, going upon the false supposition of the supremacy of man, and giving all power into his hands.

After depriving her of all rights as a married woman, if single and the owner of property, he has taxed her to support a government which recognizes her only when her property can be made profitable to it.

He has monopolized nearly all the profitable employments, and from those she is permitted to follow, she receives but a scanty remuneration.

He closes against her all the avenues to wealth and distinction, which he considers most honorable to himself. As a teacher of theology, medicine, or law, she is not known.

He has denied her the facilities for obtaining a thorough education—all colleges being closed against her.

He allows her in Church as well as State, but a subordinate position, claiming Apostolic authority for her exclusion from the ministry, and, with some exceptions, from any public participation in the affairs of the Church.

He has created a false public sentiment, by giving to the world a different code of morals for men and women, by which moral delinquencies which exclude women from society, are not only tolerated but deemed of little account in man.

He has usurped the prerogative of Jehovah himself, claiming it as his right to assign for her a sphere of action, when that belongs to her conscience and her God.

He has endeavored, in every way that he could to destroy her confidence in her own powers, to lessen her self-respect, and to make her willing to lead a dependent and abject life.
Now, in view of this entire disfranchisement of one-half the people of this country, their social and religious degradation,—in view of the unjust laws above mentioned, and because women do feel themselves aggrieved, oppressed, and fraudulently deprived of their most sacred rights, we insist that they have immediate admission to all the rights and privileges which belong to them as citizens of these United States.

In entering upon the great work before us, we anticipate no small amount of misconception, misrepresentation, and ridicule; but we shall use every instrumentality within our power to effect our object. We shall employ agents, circulate tracts, petition the State and national Legislatures, and endeavor to enlist the pulpit and the press in our behalf. We hope this Convention will be followed by a series of Conventions, embracing every part of the country.

Report of the Woman’s Rights Convention, Held at Seneca Falls, N.Y., July 19th and 20th, 1848 (Rochester, 1848)

How Iranian Women Are Protesting Against the Country's Strict Dress Code

By Dorian Geiger July 2, 2016

http://www.vice.com/read/the-iranian-women-fighting-state-censorship-one-selfie-at-a-time

Iran is home to perhaps the most strictly enforced dress code in the world. In the capital, Tehran, thousands of Gashte Ershad, or morality police—both in uniform and plainclothes—patrol the streets, looking for men with flashy jewelry or certain haircuts and women in form-fitting clothes or loose hijabs, which are required by law to be worn at all times.

According to Amnesty International, between March 2013 and March 2014, upwards of 2.9 million women received a police warning for dress code infractions. This May, a woman was even arrested for posting a photo of herself without a hijab to Instagram. And Tehran is cracking down further, deploying 7,000 new officers last month to keep an eye out for insufficiently pious outfits.

"As a woman, every time I venture out into the streets, I am constantly pre-occupied by how I should dress," said Neda, a 32-year-old Iranian woman who spoke to VICE under the condition of anonymity. "Should I be wearing this tight-fitting coat? Is my coat too short? Am I likely to be arrested because of what I am going to wear?"

Some Iranian women have resorted to cutting their hair short and dressing like men to blend in, avoid detection, and protest. Others use an app designed to alert users to the presence of patrols.

And some have also taken to removing their hijabs, sometimes just for brief moments, and taking photos of their uncovered heads as an act of resistance. The resulting photos are compiled by a site called My Stealthy Freedom. The project's Facebook page recently hit a million followers and has continued to grow despite efforts by the government to shut it down and discredit its founder, Masih Aleinjad.

With the recent influx of thousands of undercover police in Tehran, using My Stealthy Freedom has never been more important—or more dangerous—for the city's women. The platform is one of the few remaining relatively safe spaces left for Iranian women to unveil and express themselves, though the risk of getting caught has also been heightened, as anyone could be an plainclothes morality officer. This has bred an Orwellian degree of paranoia amongst Iranian women, but most My Stealthy Freedom users, including Neda, are unfazed.

"I am so much in the mood to fight for my own rights in my own country that I am not scared anymore. I want to be able to dress as I see fit," said Neda, whose photographs on My Stealthy Freedom have been featured by CNN and other international news outlets. "I could get arrested anytime, but I have no intention of giving up on fighting despite the possible dangers lurking for me."

For maybe just for a few ephemeral moments, women using My Stealthy Freedom unveil themselves in front of the lens of their smartphones. It's an open act of rebellion, a taste of freedom, and a portal of expression for oppressed women, who also view its as a pipeline to change in their country.

"There is a cultural revolution going on in Iran," said another My Stealthy Freedom user in a video sent to the site. "Our women are increasingly courageous to flout these laws and their numbers are growing. Just think about it: If everyone complied with the compulsory veiling, we would not have this new 7,000-strong police force. These women are no longer scared of the police."

"Through social media you can see the true face of Iran"—Masih Aleinjad

"For 37 years, not only my hair, but the hair of millions of Iranian women has been held hostage by the Islamic Republic," said Aleinjad, My Stealthy Freedom's founder, who created the site in 2014 while living in London. "Our hair has been held hostage because the government wants to control our bodies."

Aleinjad, 39, an Iranian journalist now living in Brooklyn, thinks this type of behavior, coupled with the existence—and popularity—of platforms like My Stealthy Freedom, speak to a turbulent cultural shift unfolding in Iran. (If she returned to her home country she would be imprisoned.)

"It's a cultural war between two lifestyles: The lifestyle that the government wants to put pressure on people to follow. And the lifestyle that the youth is already following," she added.
But this cultural shift is fueled largely by the proliferation of social media, and one, that Aleinjad suspects, is responsible for the massive deployment of undercover morality officers in Tehran.

"When you turn on the TV in Iran, you only see women in hijabs. But this is not Iran," Aleinjad contends. She described a "legal Iran," which is seen on Iranian official media, and "illegal Iran," which lives and breathes online. "Through social media you can see the true face of Iran," she said.

"Social media is a tool and weapon for Iranian people who have been censored for more than 30 years," she continued. "The government of Iran has guns, bullets, prisons, and power, but the people of Iran have Facebook, Twitter, Instagram, social media, and their own words."

It's unclear, however, whether social media alone can truly be a catalyst to real change in Iran.

"Websites like My Stealthy Freedom show there is a very strong support for change in Iran," said Alireza Nader, an Iranian foreign policy researcher for the RAND Corporation. "[But it's] not necessarily going to change the political system today or tomorrow. It's going to take a very long time for Iran's political system to change or evolve. The political system is very much reactionary. As long as Iranians question the system, they can chip away at it in the long term."

But neither that skepticism nor the ever-hovering threat of harassment, arrest, prison, or worse, are deterrents for women like the ones promoting My Stealthy Freedom.

"If I did not challenge these laws, my conscience would be full of guilt," Neda said. "I have at least managed to contribute in my own way to making it known to the entire world what Iranian women really are like and how they really wish to live."

After reading the VICE article, How Iranian Women Are Protesting Against the Country's Strict Dress Code you will create a “Found Poem”. Found Poems are special because you do not write the poetry, you must “find” it from other sources.

As you read the articles about life in Iran for women, highlight the phrases, descriptive words, and verbs that appeal to you. The idea is to choose words and phrases that are meaningful.

Afterwards, you can rearrange the words any way that you like. This poem does not have to rhyme. Your poem should not exceed 14 lines.

Here is an example of a Found Poem based on Martin Luther King’s “I Have a Dream Speech”:

Let Freedom Ring

A great American,
a great beacon light of hope.
End the long night of captivity.

One hundred years later, still sadly crippled,
still languishing.
The chains of discrimination.

One day
this nation will rise up, an oasis of freedom, and sing in the words - we are free at last.

Social Media: Enemy of the State or Power to the People?
02/27/2014 By Pierre Omidyar, founder and chairman of eBay; and publisher and CEO of First Look Media.

At a recent series of events in Beijing hosted by the Berggruen Institute, I was asked to speak about social media and the potential harm and good associated with it.

My view is pretty straightforward — I believe that social media is a tool of liberation and empowerment. That may seem fairly audacious when a good portion of the Western world is using Facebook and Twitter to post pictures of what they had for dinner or take quizzes on what TV character they may be. But the freedom to communicate openly and honestly is not something to be taken for granted. In countries where traditional media is a tool of control, these new and truly social channels have the power to radically alter our world.

In my eyes, social media is one of the most important global leaps forward in recent human history. It provides for self-expression and promotes mutual understanding. It enables rapid formation of networks and demonstrates our common humanity across cultural differences. It connects people, their ideas and values, like never before.

As for critics of this view, I remind them that social media is in its infancy. Essentially, we’re in the days of Alexander Graham Bell talking to his assistant Watson across a rudimentary wire. Once we truly learn how to harness this new technology and these new ways of communicating, we will feel the full impacts of social media.

From mobilizing young voters here in the U.S. to the roots of the Arab Spring in the Middle East, Twitter, YouTube, Facebook and others have played not just an important role, but also an instrumental one. As just one example, take the Iranian Revolution 35 years ago. Since that time, the American media has painted a grim and simplistic view of the country. Through the nightly news and other news sources, we came to know it as a theocratic, anti-American country.

Yet in the course of a few months in 2009, as thousands gathered in Tehran to protest the presidential election, something in our worldview changed. For the first time young people in America were connecting with young people in Iran, and realizing they had far more in common than they’d ever thought. Americans became invested in the Iranian outcome because ties had been forged through real time accounts on cell phones and laptops. Consequently, our government began to see popular American support for the uprising there and later in Egypt, Libya, Tunisia and other countries. People in those countries saw Americans not just standing idly by, but for the first time engaged in their battles and supporting their efforts. Through it all, traditional media struggled to keep up with the powerful exchanges happening in Twitter feeds and blog posts. A truly new and free form of global personal communication was born.

Recently, I saw firsthand the fear that some governments have about truly empowering their citizens through these new technologies. In China, the government of President Xi Jinping has expressed concern about the real power that social media has to spread information. Hundreds of bloggers across the country have been detained and intimidation tactics have ramped up. Microbloggers have been threatened with three years’ jail time for posting “false” information that is viewed at least 5,000 times. Can the Chinese government accept social media’s inherent offer of liberation or empowerment? Or will government “management” of social media reduce it to a modern version of state-controlled media?

The chilling effect is palpable — driving some underground and forcing others to seek different avenues to communicate. What the government fails to realize is that people will not stop communicating; they will always find new ways to do so. The power of truth and the reach of social networks can be a threatening combination for those with something to hide.

The important work now is keeping these networks public and open. As some governments see both their power and potential, they are clamping down. In some scenarios, with expanding control and the use of government-employed contributors, social media could become yet another tool of oppression.

I’ve seen firsthand the power of human connections online forming communities of interest. They are self-monitoring, with their own norms and expectations. From the printing press to the telephone to the Internet, each of these tools has been a way to organize and activate — to give people the voice they want and deserve.

Forward-thinking governments will listen to those voices and empower them. Others will be fearful of the voice of the people and remain on the losing side of history.

1. Why does the author believe “In my eyes, social media is one of the most important global leaps forward in recent human history”?

2. How does social media affect the way Americans view other cultures?

3. In what ways has social media helped empower people?

4. What potential exists for social media to oppress people?
@PhillyBenFranklin

“About this time, I was asked by a nobleman what would satisfy the Americans. I answered that it might easily be comprised in a few Re’s:

- call your Forces,
- store Castle William,
- pair the Damage done to Boston,
- peal your unconstitutional Acts,
- nounce your pretentions to Tax us,
- fund the duties you have extorted; after this
- quire, and
- ceive payment for the destroyed Tea, with the voluntary grants of the Colonies,

And then
- joice in a happy
- conciliation.”
“There is one thing more to which I would take the liberty of soliciting your most serious and constant attention; to wit, the cloathing of your Troops, and the procuring of every possible supply in your power from time to time for that end. If the several States exert themselves in future in this instance, and I trust they will, I hope that the Supplies they will be able to furnish in aid of those, which Congress may immediately import themselves, will be equal and competent to every demand. If they do not, I fear—I am satisfied the Troops will never be in a situation to answer the public expectation and perform the duties required of them. No pains, no efforts on the part of the States can be too great for this purpose. It is not easy to give you a just and accurate idea of the sufferings of the Army at large—of the loss of men on this account. Were they to be minutely detailed, your feelings would be wounded, and the relation would probably be not received without a degree of doubt & discredit. We had in Camp, on the 23rd Inst by a Field Return then taken, not less than 2898 men unfit for duty, by reason of their being barefoot and otherwise naked. Besides this number, sufficiently distressing of itself, there are many Others detained in Hospitals and crowded in Farmers Houses for the same causes. . . .”

... Mankind being originally equal in the order of creation, the equality could only be destroyed by some subsequent circumstance: the distinctions of rich and poor may in a great measure be accounted for, and that without having recourse to the harsh ill-sounding names of oppression and avarice. Oppression is often the consequence, but seldom or never the means of riches; and though avarice will preserve a man from being necessitously poor, it generally makes him too timorous to be wealthy. But there is another and greater distinction for which no truly natural or religious reason can be assigned, and that is the distinction of men into KINGS and SUBJECTS. Male and female are the distinctions of nature, good and bad the distinctions of heaven; but how a race of men came into the world so exalted above the rest, and distinguished like some new species, is worth inquiring into, and whether they are the means of happiness or of misery to mankind. In the early ages of the world, according to the scripture chronology there were no kings; the consequence of which was, there were no wars; it is the pride of kings which throws mankind into confusion. . . .

"Where Law ends, (says Mr. Locke) TYRANNY begins, if the Law be transgess'd to anothers harm": No one I believe will deny the truth of the observation, and therefore I again appeal to common sense, whether the act which provides for the quartering and billeting the King's troops, was not TRANSGRESS'D, when the barracks at the Castle WHICH ARE SUFFICIENT TO CONTAIN MORE than the whole number of soldiers now in this town, were ABSOLUTELY REFUS'D: This I presume cannot be contested. Should any one say that the law is not transgres'd "to anothers harm," the assertion I dare say would contradict the feelings of every sober householder in the town. No man can pretend to say that the peace and good order of the community is so secure with soldiers quartered in the body of a city as without them. Besides, where military power is introduced, military maxims are propagated and adopted, which are inconsistent with and must soon eradicate every idea of civil government. Do we not already find some persons weak enough to believe, that an officer is oblig'd to obey the orders of his superior, tho' it be even AGAINST the law!
We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable Rights, that among these are Life, Liberty and the pursuit of Happiness.--That to secure these rights, Governments are instituted among Men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed, --That whenever any Form of Government becomes destructive of these ends, it is the Right of the People to alter or to abolish it, and to institute new Government, laying its foundation on such principles and organizing its powers in such form, as to them shall seem most likely to effect their Safety and Happiness. Prudence, indeed, will dictate that Governments long established should not be changed for light and transient causes; and accordingly all experience hath shewn, that mankind are more disposed to suffer, while evils are sufferable, than to right themselves by abolishing the forms to which they are accustomed. But when a long train of abuses and usurpations, pursuing invariably the same Object evinces a design to reduce them under absolute Despotism, it is their right, it is their duty, to throw off such Government, and to provide new Guards for their future security.--Such has been the patient sufferance of these Colonies; and such is now the necessity which constrains them to alter their former Systems of Government. The history of the present King of Great Britain is a history of repeated injuries and usurpations, all having in direct object the establishment of an absolute Tyranny over these States. To prove this, let Facts be submitted to a candid world.

<td>In the nineteenth century Philadelphia’s booming economy attracted immigrants with diverse cultures and important skills. Industrialization created jobs, as well as pockets of enterprise all over the city.</td>

<td></td>
<td>Philadelphia profited greatly from the railroad phenomenon. Among the giants, the Baldwin Locomotive works stretched from Broad and Spring Garden all the way to 22nd Street. The behemoth company employed 8,000-10,000 workers and supplied trains to countries around the world, such as Brazil, Russia, and Japan. By 1842, trackage for the Philadelphia and Reading Railroad extended from the banks of the Schuylkill to the Delaware River. The Port Richmond yards and docks covered over 230 acres and were the largest privately owned tidewater terminal in the world.</td>
</tr>
<tr>

<td>In the 1830s, the textile industry surged. Mid-century, there were 60,000 people employed in approximately 700 textile companies clustered within neighborhoods of Kensington, Manayunk, Germantown, and Frankford. Production included lace, hosiery, clothing, hats, shoes, cotton and woolen yarns, blankets, and leather goods.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>By 1859, Philadelphia was home to over two dozen processors of hides. The Adams and Keen Company became the largest pre-Civil War producer of leather. Nearby in Northern Liberties, at Front and Laurel Streets, the Henry Disston Saw Manufacturing Company was described as “the most extensive in the United States and probably the largest in the world.”</td> supported industries whose diversity is unmatched in the history of manufacturing. Hundreds of manufacturing plants produced, among other things, rope, cordage, men's suits, women's dresses, knit fabrics, sweaters, socks and silk stockings, upholstery, tapestries, bindings, braids, ribbons and trimmings, carpets, blankets, draperies, and yarns.

While the city supplied the world with goods, it was also its own best customer. Thousands of modest-sized firms formed a web of interchanging industries. For instance, a carpet maker might purchase yarn from one supplier, have it dyed at a second, buy patterns from a third, and acquire punch cards used to control weaving jacquards at yet another. In return, the card makers purchased specially coated paper stock from Manayunk manufacturers, and dyers bought specialty machinery from Procter and Schwartz, which acquired its metal casting from foundries all around town. This unique interdependent network of talent and resources contributed enormously to personal and business success.

Still, though Philadelphia hosted some huge facilities, Philadelphia was known far better as an incubator for small enterprises, as a city packed with workshops and mid-size firms begun in many cases by workers or supervisors who "graduated" from employment to entrepreneurship. In Lawrence, Pittsburgh, or Detroit in its Ford era, a tiny number of great firms were the major employers (American Woolen, U.S. Steel) and dominated the landscape as well as local economic and political life. Yet in Philadelphia, even the eight to ten thousand workers engaged at the Baldwin Locomotive Works were a minuscule fragment of the city's quarter million industrial employees. Hence the city was dependent neither on one manufacturing trade nor on any cluster of giant corporations for its economic health.

Of course, none of this could have been developed without the international demand, and the response of Philadelphia's manufacturing companies. These companies shipped its final products and from which materials, fuel, and for a long period, fresh workers and entrepreneurs arrived by ship and rail. During the decades surrounding 1900, the city drew heavily on Pennsylvania’s rich coal reserves, dependent on the reliability of the vast Pennsylvania Railroad system, the Reading and the B & O, and profitted from its deepwater port, through which a considerable fraction of the world’s wool supply flowed steadily. Of course, Philadelphia firms supplied the nation with tools and saws, fabrics and machinery, but they were also alert to the possibilities of international/export trade.

Still, Philadelphia by 1890 may have virtually covered the world of manufacturing, but its products were in large measure confined to domestic markets. Much of the reason for this lay in the American system of protective tariffs. In order to "free" the new United States from economic dependence on technically more advanced Britain, the federal government was determined to erect a set of import taxes/tariffs which would bring foreign goods' prices up to or above those of products "Made in the U.S.A." These barriers certainly had something to do with the rise of industry (precisely what is still being debated), but by the late nineteenth century they generated a secondary consequence. The entire cost structure of American production and consumption was, on average, pitched at a level higher in global terms than that of our principal rivals, Britain and Germany. As a result, though our standard of living may have been higher, most of our goods were priced higher for export than those of European competitors. The erratic but considerable expansion of demand at home sustained overall growth, but as the industrial system matured, concern mounted about how to establish additional outlets for the products of our manufacturing capacity.

With the influx of people, immigrants and citizens from outside of Pennsylvania, new communities sprang up all around the city. Henry Disston, head of Tacony’s Disston and Sons Saw Works, envisioned an idealized community, building houses, parks, banks and movie theaters around his factory, some of which still stand today. Over 100 beer breweries populated one small corner of the city, creating a community still known as Brewerytown.

Philadelphia became defined by its small craft businesses that produced superior quality goods. As years passed, many

<td>Context</td>
<td>Through most of the nineteenth century the United States economy needed both unskilled and skilled workers. In fact, after the 1880s, the demand was mostly for unskilled workers to fill the growing need in manufacturing. Simultaneously, conditions in some areas of Europe were in a downward economic slide. Therefore, southern and eastern Europeans, possessing few skills, were drawn to the economic promise that the United States had to offer, the push-pull factors. In Europe four major forces changed society in the nineteenth century: a huge increase in population, the spread of commercial agriculture, the rise of the factory system, and the expansion of relatively inexpensive transportation, such as steamships and railroads. After 1873, steamships made the journeys across the Atlantic quicker, cheaper, and safer, while steam-powered trains improved overland trips. These factors created the perfect equation for mass migration to the United States. The change of the European economy as the century moved into the first several decades caused a crisis in agriculture and crafts. Commercial agriculture caused the price of land to soar; open field agriculture also pushed peasants and others who had worked small plots on estates off the land. Subsistence farming declined for it was too expensive to purchase land. All the while, the population increased. Thus there was a shortage of jobs. The same situation existed with skilled artisans. European factories were producing items at larger quantities and cheaper; thus, skilled artisans could not compete. In fact, skilled workers also found a loss of their jobs due to industrialization in the 19th century.</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
It appears that most Europeans had a sense of what was happening in America. Some had relatives in America who undoubtedly shared information about jobs, housing, land costs, and wages. There were also advertisements posted in European cities by steamship companies, railroads, and states themselves who were trying to attract people. Between 1868 and 1873, when crops failed in Sweden, over 100,000 Swedes moved to America. There was much information published there about the Homestead Act and its promise of free land.

The immigrants coming to America and moving into the major cities, such as Philadelphia, also had advanced knowledge of their destination. Most of the eastern Europeans, Italians, Jews, Romanians, Greeks, Slavs, went to industrial cities where the number of unskilled jobs was increasing. Most had family and ethnic networks that provided access to jobs, housing, and even funds for transportation. This “chain migration,” the process whereby immigrants followed family and friends to the same areas, played a significant role in creating the settlement patterns of specific nationalities.

During the 18th and very early 19th centuries, Philadelphia was a major port in North America. New York had always competed with Philadelphia and Boston for the premier spot. In 1825, Philadelphia rapidly lost its position with the opening of the Erie Canal. It was at this point in history that it became faster and cheaper to leave from New York to the western frontier. So, while Philadelphia lost its top position as a port, it was still a viable and active port for the remainder of the 19th century.

Several major steamship companies having passenger and cargo services in Philadelphia began operating in the 1820s. They had regular weekly service from Philadelphia to Liverpool, England. Liverpool was a huge port that attracted mostly Irish and British immigrants but also people from Europe who were looking to obtain cheap passage to North America. The second decade of the 19th century had 20,000 immigrants coming through Philadelphia’s port, about ten percent of the total number of immigrants coming to America. By mid-century a steerage ticket cost eight pounds eight shillings, several months’ wages for a laborer.

By the 1870s, modern steamships enabled the transatlantic voyage to be reduced from four to two weeks or less. Steamships made the journey quicker, less expensive, and safer. The most economical means for most immigrants was via the steerage class. Passenger lines could pack 900-1400 passengers onto the lower decks of their ships. Compartments were similar to dormitories. The cost was $20.00.

There were other ports in Europe, specifically Bremen, Germany and Antwerp, Belgium where American steamships had direct passage to Philadelphia. Fredric Miller, author of numerous books on Philadelphia, examined the proportion of the foreign population in Philadelphia throughout the 19th century. He noted: “By 1850 three out of ten Philadelphians were foreign-born, the highest proportion ever recorded. The Germans and Irish accounted for more than three-quarters of the total, as about 20,000 of the former and 70,000 of the latter lived in Philadelphia. By the mid 1870s, Philadelphia had a population total of three-quarters of a million people. Over a quarter of its people were foreign-born; 100,000 Irish and 50,000 Germans accounted for more than five-sixths of the city’s immigrants, while almost all of the other immigrants were from England and Scotland.”

Philadelphia inherited more than one million immigrants in the 19th century. However, more continued their journey than disembarked. They moved on to other destinations by means of the very good railroad system that existed in Pennsylvania. In the 1890s, the railroad spent $10,000 to expand and modernize the port facility at Washington Avenue called the Emigrant Depot. It 1896 this state-of-art building included electric lights, heating, an area for medical examinations, a railroad ticket office, dressing rooms, a waiting room, and a travel information bureau. Now immigrants would not have to leave the port and be inundated with overzealous “entrepreneurs” offering every imaginable service to these newly arriving immigrants.

The Census of 1880 showed more than 90 percent of Philadelphia’s immigrants were from Germany, Great Britain or Ireland. However, the 1880s saw a radical change in the ethnicity of its new immigrant population with the influx of 30,000 Russian Jews and 20,000 Italians. In fact, by 1900 the Italians and Irish populations became equal in numbers, while the Russian Jewish population reached 100,000. It should also

NOTES:

Excerpt from: Constitutional Rights Foundation

- Why Do Immigrants Come to America?
From 1820 to 2001, more than 67 million people entered this country from many lands. Some paid their own way. Some came as indentured servants. Some signed up as contract laborers to work on American railroads, canals, farms, and factories. Others came as refugees or entered the United States illegally. Millions abandoned their homes to become part of the greatest mass migration of people in the history of the world. Why did they do this, and why do they still come?
The Peopling of Philadelphia: Immigration

As in most cases of human migration, there are "push" and "pull" factors at work. "Push" factors are conditions that encourage people to leave their homelands. They include such things as famine, unemployment, and poverty. Also, crippling taxes, wars, the military draft, and religious and political persecution have forced people to abandon their native countries.

Immigrants coming to this country have not only been "pushed" from their homelands. They have also been "pulled" by the seemingly limitless opportunities of America. There was land to farm. There were forests to cut down and railroads to build. The Gold Rush of 1849 stirred the imaginations of the adventurous. Those trapped in poverty saw a way out by getting jobs as farm laborers or in the industrial cities of America. Still others were drawn by the American ideals of freedom and equality.

Millions of immigrants have pulled up their roots and journeyed to America. Immigrants are still coming. They are coming for the same reason that most immigrants came in the past: for hope and a chance for a better life.

● How Has America Accommodated So Many Immigrants?

The United States has forged a nation of immigrants. The presence of different ethnic groups could easily have led to permanent divisions and ethnic strife as it has in other places. This country has experienced some of these problems at various times, most notably racism and nativism. Yet through all the hardships and setbacks, it has managed to mold a united nation from diverse ethnic groups. There are many reasons for this success.

First, from the beginning, the United States has been a nation of immigrants. In 1783, President George Washington stated: "The bosom of America is open to receive not only the opulent and respectable stranger, but the oppressed and persecuted of all nations and religions." Accepting immigrants is considered part of American culture.

Second, America's commitment to freedom has encouraged toleration of different religions and traditions. The First Amendment to the U.S. Constitution guarantees freedom of expression and the right to freely practice any religion.

Third, upward mobility has kept ethnic groups from being mired in poverty. The United States has historically had a strong economy. The growing economy has pulled most people up, including immigrants. In most cases, after a generation or so, people have joined America's vast middle class.

Fourth, the United States' two-party system has helped prevent political fragmentation along ethnic lines. The United States has had some third-party movements, but they have been short-lived. Those engaged in politics have had to work within one of two parties. The parties in turn have had to accommodate a broad range of people.

Fifth, American ideals proclaim an openness to immigrants. The Declaration of Independence proclaimed that "all men are created equal." The Statue of Liberty stands in New York Harbor as a beacon welcoming immigrants. The United States has not always lived up to these ideals, but they have given immigrants a sense that they belong in America and have encouraged toleration from everyone.

Context

Throughout the 19th century, ships, the immigrants on the ships, and cargo were subjected to stringent inspection. This inspection and quarantine station, called the Lazaretto Station, has often been referred to as Philadelphia’s Ellis Island. In fact, it was built almost one hundred years earlier than Ellis Island, in 1799, as a response to the Yellow Fever epidemic of 1793. The Lazaretto is located ten miles below Philadelphia on the Delaware River (Essington, PA), just south of today’s Philadelphia Airport.

“Lazarettos” were built throughout Europe as early as the fourteenth century. They were places of quarantine to house the sick. The derivation of the name appears to have come from the biblical beggar Lazarus. The first “official” lazaretto was created near Venice, Italy in 1423. It was a small island in the Venetian lagoon used as a quarantine station as early as 1403, although another station, not state sanctioned, was established in 1347 to house victims of the plague that had spread through Europe.

Benjamin Franklin, Dr. Benjamin Rush and other interested Philadelphia citizens in the mid 18th century created the first quarantine station Philadelphia. It was located near Fort Mifflin along the Delaware River. This site proved to be geographically and psychologically too close to the city. Thus a new site was found, ten miles down river and out of sight, to protect Philadelphia’s citizens from infectious diseases. In fact, the establishment of this quarantine station in 1799 was under the authorization of the Philadelphia Department of Health.

In the 19th century passenger ships, along with their cargo, were to stop at the Lazaretto Quarantine Station to be inspected. Often it was deemed that the ship and cargo be fumigated and sometimes the cargo was destroyed. In many instances, it was the belongings of the immigrants that were destroyed in belief that they harbored yellow fever or cholera. “If there was sickness or death found on board, those afflicted would be removed to the Hospital to await recovery or death, and the dead would be buried on site. All cargo and possessions would be ‘purified,’ and the ship scoured and whitewashed clean. The quarantine process at this stage could take a week to longer than a month.”

Lazaretto Station consisted of a thirty-room brick building called the Hospital, a cemetery, carriage house, outdoor kitchen, and guard house. The hospital was “modeled after the Pennsylvania Hospital in Philadelphia, and the wings were used for hospital purposes.

Later in the century the Lazaretto physicians were required to file federal certificates of inspection. The Lazaretto Station, a ten-acre site, was vacated in 1895. The buildings survive to this day, used for various purposes over the years. that included a hospital, offices, residences, and many smaller buildings. Philadelphia’s Lazaretto, according to the historian, Fredric Miller, is “certainly one of the first, oldest, and most intact quarantine stations in the United States.”

Guided Practice (and/or Cooperative Practice)

1. The teacher should establish groups for a ‘Jigsaw’ activity—4 groups
   - Divide the article from the Pennsylvania Magazine, “Guarding Against Alien Impurities: The Philadelphia Lazaretto, 1854-1893, into 4 sections.
   - While students are reading their assigned section help them stay focused by asking them to use the 5 Ws-approach (who, what, where, when, why), and use the 5Ws for sharing the highlights with classmates.

2. See Resource section for article; permission for use given by the author, Edward T. Mormon and HSP.

Extension: Using a computer or ipad, have students review Philadelphia’s Public Ledger article describing the Lazaretto, August 14, 1879, four years before it closes.
(http://www.sas.upenn.edu/~dbarnes/1879_description.html)
- Distribute a portion of the reading to each group.
- Jigsaw the groups so all information is shared.

Independent Practice

To review and reinforce information, distribute a graphic organizer with 5- columns labelled who, what, why, when, where to each student.

Have students complete the chart independently with the information learned from their reading and presentations of their classmates during the jigsaw activity.

Closure

Students may select one project to submit:

1. Have students research and write an article on quarantine today, and if there is a need for such screening. Why or why not? Has there been use of quarantine screening in the 21st century?
2. Have students research and write a short paper comparing and contrasting Philadelphia’s Lazaretto to several quarantine stations/lazarettos around the world. Students should compare and contrast their physical design, why each was constructed, years in use, etc.

Suggested 19th century quarantine stations around the world:
- Lazzaretto Vecchio, Italy (1423)
- Dubrovnik Lazaret, Croatia (1627)
- Kamau Taurua, New Zealand (1863)
- Hospital Island, Maine (1832)
The Lazaretto, 1799-1893: Philadelphia’s Ellis Island

- Quail Island, New Zealand (1842)
- Molokai, Hawaii (1866)
- Angel Island, California (1891)
- Grosse Island, Quebec, Canada (1832)

Context

In 1876 the United States International Exhibition was held in Philadelphia. Its purpose was to introduce to the world the modern successes in commerce and technology: to inform and show off each country's accomplishments and products. That year happened to coincide with America’s one hundredth birthday, thus the 1876 Centennial Exhibition. It was spectacular. Exhibitors from forty countries from around the world participated. People from around the globe came to Philadelphia to witness the grandeur of it all. Middle Eastern countries, Tunisia, Egypt, and the Ottoman Empire, were represented in the Exhibition’s main building. Persia (now Iran) initially accepted the offer to exhibit but later declined. The Centennial was an opportunity for the people of the world to see that Middle Eastern people were skillful, industrious, and “advanced.” It provided a worldwide venue in which to display their industries. After all, commerce was a major goal for participating nations.

Egypt's exhibition at the Centennial was grand, 5000 square feet. Its entrance paid tribute to its past with a huge structure resembling an ancient temple from the land of the Nile, painted in imitation stone. Two massive pillars supported the entrance. Over the entrance was the globe with encircling wings, the ancient Egyptian symbol of eternity, and on either side of the entrance crouched a sphinx. The sign on the side of the entrance read: “Egypt- the oldest people of the world sends its morning greeting to the youngest nation.” Upon entering the exhibition the walls of the court-like room were... hung with photographs and drawings of Egypt. The room held an array of opulent objects made of velvet, silk and embroiderries of gold. Fine drawing room furniture with ivory and mother-of-pearl designs, taken from ancient mosques, were displayed and for sale. In fact everything was for sale; the exquisite jewelry, precious stones, carpets, works of iron and copper, pipes, silk, and gold and silver threads. It was a show of fine workmanship and design. Cotton was the main product Egypt displayed. The intention was to show the world their fine cotton and strengthen its cotton export business.

The exhibition from the Ottoman Empire/Turkey had a Turkish Café whereby visitors could drink Turkish coffee and smoke Turkish tobacco. They also presented a fine display of pottery, crafts, jewelry, carpets, leather goods, and tobacco in a “Bazaar-like” setting. The Tunisia display was similar. Syrian Christians even had a “bazaar” filled with Christian religious items from the Holy Land. What was not sold at the Centennial was shipped to New York auction houses.

The Centennial afforded westerners the opportunity to meet people from the Middle East who spoke English in a setting that attempted to duplicate their native land. People could observe their customs, clothing, and environment in these exhibitions. Thus, international trade, human understanding and enlightenment, for some, moved further along the timeline of U.S.- Middle East history.

Japan, a close friend of the U.S. at the time, began developing and building its exhibition two years prior to the international exhibition, in 1874. The country allotted $600,000 for their grand display of pottery, carvings, porcelain, lacquerware, furniture, and bronzes. Their spectacular exhibition won them 142 awards.

The China Empire exhibition was adjacent to the Japanese Pavilion. It was half the size, and featured an ornamental gateway, celestial pagoda, vases and various artwork.

Note that the Centennial highlighted commercial, industrial, and international exhibitions. Countries from around the world participated but this lesson will focus specifically on countries from the Middle East/North Africa (Egypt, Turkey, and Tunisia) along with China, Japan, the Philippines, and Hawaii. Philadelphia hosted 10 million visitors from around the world and, therefore, it was an opportunity for Americans/Philadelphians, and foreigners, to see and meet people from other cultures of which they had no first-hand knowledge. |

Guided Practice (and/or Cooperative Practice)
- Discuss types of primary resource materials.
- On the smartboard, show students a quick overview of the 17 photographs from the Centennial (see folder). The photographs are of the Middle Eastern/North African exhibits, along with photographs of the exhibits built/created by China, Japan, the Philippines, and Hawaii. These photographs are from the Free Library of Philadelphia’s Centennial Collection which is a comprehensive collection of all of the international exhibitions. For this lesson only non-western exhibits are in the corresponding folder.
- Demonstrate the use of the Photo Analysis Worksheet using one photograph.

Independent Practice
1. Students will use a Photo Analysis Worksheet to “read” and analyze photographs.
   - Assign students two photographs to analyze using Photo Analysis Worksheets.
   - Distribute two worksheets to each student or pairs of students.
2. After both analysis worksheets are completed, have students write a brief article (1-2 paragraphs) for the Philadelphia Inquirer (summer 1876) describing the exhibit and items they have viewed from a country’s exhibition. Students may research additional information in order to have a more comprehensive perspective for their article.

Closure
1. Ask students to share their responses from the Photo Analysis Worksheet; teacher should record major points for all to see on the board or chart paper. Discuss similarities and differences.
2. Have students share their article about the exhibit they described.

Assessment
Have students write about misconceptions Philadelphians in 1876 might have had when seeing Turkish and Egyptian people for the first time. Why? Describe any stereotypes or preconceived ideas students have of people from the Middle East today. Why? Wrap up discussion with ideas students have about the international

<td>Context</td>
<td>As a result of the Yellow Fever epidemics throughout the 1790s and early 1800s, Philadelphia organized an effort to establish the first public water system in an American city. What resulted was the Fairmount Water Works, built by the famous Benjamin Henry Latrobe. In 1798, when Philadelphia first organized the Watering Committee to find a way to supply the city with pure water, Americans were very aware of the adverse effect urban development had on water supplies of Europe. London was struggling with the pollution of the Thames. In fact, Philadelphia had already started to pollute the Delaware River. Consequently, there was a conscious decision to bring pure water of the Schuylkill River into the city. City fathers called upon Latrobe, the engineer and architect who later became known for his work on the United States Capitol, for his advice. Latrobe was in Philadelphia at the time (1798) to build the Bank of Pennsylvania, whose design has been called the first monument of the Greek Revival in America. Latrobe’s first plan, a neoclassical structure at Centre Square (the location of City Hall today) housed a steam engine, boiler, and pump. That building quickly proved inadequate to serve the needs of a growing city. In 1811, Latrobe’s assistants, John Davis and Frederick Graff, proposed construction of a new pumping station on the banks of the Schuylkill River. The Fairmount Water Works opened in 1822, just outside city limits in the district of Spring Garden. People came from around the world to view this technological achievement amidst its magnificent gardens. The Fairmount Water Works illustrates the romantic concepts of the era and was celebrated as a prime example of the blending of</td> nature and technology. By the 1840s the clean, neoclassical architecture of the buildings, the landscaped garden, and the promenades up to and around the reservoirs on “Fair Mount,” as the rise was identified on an 1687 map of Philadelphia, were all major attractions. Ornamental sculptures, fountains, and airy gazebos added to the visual pleasure of the site. For the general public as well as for those with engineering or technical interests, the technological components at Fairmount made the Water Works a unique wonder-- the turning of massive waterwheels, the action of the powerful pumps, and the sparkling reservoirs containing the city’s water supply. The Fairmount Water Works was an exciting place to visit for locals and for visitors from around the world.

In his American Notes for General Circulation, Charles Dickens recorded his 1840 visit to Fairmount:

Philadelphia is most bountifully provided with fresh water, which is showered and jerked about, and turned on, and poured off everywhere. The Water-works, which are on a height near the city, are no less ornamental than useful, being tastefully laid out as a public garden, and kept in the best and neatest order. The river is dammed at this point, and forced by its own power into certain high tanks or reservoirs, whence the whole city, to the top stories of the houses, is supplied at a very trifling expense.

By the 1830s Fairmount had become the prototype of a water-supply system for growing urban areas in the United States and abroad. Graff acted as consultant for more than thirty-seven other water works. In 1844 the system supplied an average of 5.3 million gallons of water per day to 28,082 households, expenditures were $29,713, and the revenue into the treasury was $151,501.

From 1815 to the consolidation of the city with its districts in 1854, Fairmount Water Works was the sole pumping station supplying Philadelphia with water. Although technological improvements were made with the installation of water turbines beginning in 1851, Fairmount Water Works began to deteriorate by the 1880s. River pollution reached untenable proportions in the 1890s, and the facility was decommissioned as a pumping station in 1909.

Practice

(http://pabook2.libraries.psu.edu/palitmap/FairmountWW.html)

This is a brief, clearly written overview of the Fairmount Water Works. Have students read and highlight major aspects of the rise and fall of the Water Works. It is suggested that students create a timeline.

Independent Practice

Divide class into teams, or students may work independently. One team will research Philadelphia’s water supply past and present. This presentation should include what replaced the Fairmount Water Works when it closed in 1909.

All other teams will research the water supply in a large city in an African or South Asian country, also a World Heritage City: Suggestions:

- Cairo, Egypt
- Dakar, Senegal
- Mombasa, Kenya
- Fez, Morocco
- Timbuktu, Mali
- Kandy, Sri Lanka
- Hue, Viet Nam
- Surakarta, Indonesia
- Amer, India

The team may choose their country/city or teacher assigns. Each group will research information, using reliable sources, primary and secondary, if possible, about the past and present conditions of drinking water, and the health conditions of the people.

Closure

Teams will present their research to the class.

Assessment

Students will write an essay comparing and contrasting all of the presentations presented on drinking water past and present in urban areas, Philadelphia and African and South Asian cities.

Philadelphia, A City of Neighborhoods

William Penn, the founder of Philadelphia, grew up in the Tower Hill section of London, one of the many storied neighborhoods in the capital of England. Before Penn set foot on the Delaware River shoreline in October 1682, he lived in a number of European cities including Paris, Dublin and Amsterdam. Each of those centuries-old European cities contained a rich fabric of fabled neighborhoods.

Curiously, the moniker of "The City of Neighborhoods" is carried by the city Penn founded instead of one of the European cities where firmly established neighborhoods existed long before Philadelphia was even a figment in Penn's imagination. New York City, formally founded before Penn's arrival in America, has hundreds more identified neighborhoods than Philadelphia, judging by the list of nearly 200 neighborhood names compiled by the Philadelphia City Department of Records. NYC's Department of City Planning references America's largest city merely as "A City of Neighborhoods" — not using the distinguishing word "The." Boston, Chicago, St. Louis, and other cities also regard themselves as "a" City of Neighborhoods.

The origins of Philadelphia's claim are unclear. The city was regarded as "The City of Homes" as far back as the 1870s, and an 1893 book termed Philadelphia "a city of residences" with praise for the legacy of homeownership by "employers and employees" dating from Penn's arrival. A 1976 booklet on the historical development of Philadelphia neighborhoods published by Philadelphia's City Planning Commission stated, "Philadelphia as a city of neighborhoods has antecedents as far back as the city's founding."

Whether the savvy snagging of an enticing marketing slogan or sheer happenstance, the reputation of "The City of Neighborhoods" is consistent with the fact that Philadelphia historically has defined itself through its residential character. Implicit in the "City of Neighborhoods" dynamic is the intense pride Philadelphians hold about the distinct residential areas comprising this city. Philadelphians love their city but they particularly love those sections of their city where they were born, raised and in many instances continue to live.

Many of the current neighborhoods around Philadelphia existed as separate boroughs, districts and townships in the County of Philadelphia before absorption into the city via the 1854 Act of Consolidation. Before consolidation, Philadelphia's city boundaries extended only as far as William Penn's original plan, from the Delaware River to the Schuylkill and from Vine to South Streets. Consolidation brought into the city neighborhoods such as historic Germantown in the northwest, formally founded one year before William Penn's arrival, and the Spring Garden community on the city's northwest edge.

The distinction of being Philadelphia's oldest continuously occupied neighborhood belongs to Tacony, with records of residents dating from a decade prior to William Penn's arrival. This neighborhood located along the Delaware River, in what is now Philadelphia's Lower Northeast section, is near the place where Penn made a Treaty of Peace with the Native Americans who originally inhabited the Philadelphia region.

Neighborhoods appear to be stable, yet they are continually changing. This is evident in Society Hill, the lauded upscale community of colonial-era homes adjacent to Independence National Historical Park. The name Society Hill originated with the Free Society of Traders, a colonial-era merchant's society, and once applied to the entire region from today's Pine Street down to Christian Street. The name fell out of use by the nineteenth century, but assumed new life during the 1950s period of urban renewal.

Urban renewal, called by some, gentrification, transformed Society Hill from a hardscrabble residential area filled with commercial buildings into an elite enclave. However that renewal also triggered removal of Philadelphia's oldest African-American community dating from colonial times — the area examined in Dr. W.E.B. DuBois' seminal 1899 book, "The Philadelphia Negro," prepared as sociological research for the University of Pennsylvania.

The changing character of this city's neighborhoods is also evident in North Philadelphia's now overwhelmingly African-American Strawberry Mansion section, which housed Philadelphia's largest Jewish community during the first half of the twentieth century. Philadelphia's character as a "City of Neighborhoods" also developed from immigration and absorption of new populations. Successive waves of immigrants from across Europe, blacks migrating from the South, and Hispanics (primarily Puerto Ricans) added distinctive imprints to the complexions of neighborhoods. Interestingly, Philadelphia's famous nickname — the "City of Brotherly Love," derived from the translation of the Greek name Penn gave his city — also masks a history of un-neighborly turmoil.

Philadelphia's earliest race riots targeted African Americans in today's Society Hill in the early nineteenth century, and by the 1840s anti-Catholic sentiment targeted Irish immigrants in Kensington and...
Southwark. In the 1950s-1960s efforts to preserve rare integration became defining struggles in neighborhoods like Mt. Airy, located in Philadelphia's leafy Northwest section. These were contemporary challenges for a neighborhood with a long history. Mt. Airy inherited its name from the mansion owned by a Colonial-era Chief Justice of Pennsylvania's Supreme Court, then expanded residentially in the late 1800s as trolley and commuter train lines created links to Center City.

Surprisingly for a city steeped in history, the neighborhood-memory of many Philadelphians extends back for only a couple of decades. Few among the thousands coming to the Sports Complex in South Philadelphia yearly to cheer the city's professional baseball team are aware that Philadelphia's century-plus long baseball tradition began in North Philadelphia during the 1880s. Two teams from that era remain active in Major League Baseball including the beloved Phillies.

Today many see South Philadelphia as historically the Italian section of the city. Few are aware of that area's origins with Swedish settlers as evidenced by the Gloria Dei (Old Swedes') Church, the oldest church in Pennsylvania. And along with Italians, the area has growing Mexican and Southeast Asian populations. Philadelphians hold a heartfelt loyalty about their neighborhoods. And that loyalty radiates through the collective psyche of the city that adores local cuisine like juicy cheesesteaks, and wild support for professional sports teams reflects in the name of the mascot of Philadelphia's MLB team: the "Phillie Phanatic." Although Philadelphia's population fluctuates and facial features of its communities change, that pride in being a part of a particular neighborhood remains resilient.

| Context           | American trade with China began in 1784 with the first American merchant ship, the Empress of China. Robert Morris, a Philadelphia financier, was the principal investor. The ship was to leave Philadelphia for Canton, but poor weather conditions caused the Empress of China to leave from New York. Thus begins America’s independent trade with China and the beginnings of the long, ongoing process of the nation’s financial, cultural, and industrial globalization. Initially, China showed an interest in purchasing three items from American merchants: Spanish bullion, ginseng from the Appalachian Mountains, and furs, particularly sea otter pelts. Bullion, also known as specie, was usually in the form of Spanish silver mostly mined in Latin America. The Chinese were quite particular about their imports. They had a high regard for Spanish bullion and acquired a great deal of silver as result of trading with American merchants. Silver, used as a commodity and not a currency, was not charged an import fee and also made it more desirable for Americans to use for exchanging goods. European traders pressured Canton officials to make bullion a duty-free import. However, by the second decade of the 19th century opium became the most desired commodity for import by the Chinese. American ships traveled long and dangerous routes to deliver their goods, so they made certain to return with cargo. The extraordinary travel risks along with the reality of pirate attacks (for the bullion cargo) were constant. Nevertheless, it was the selling of Chinese goods that apparently made this trade venture exceedingly profitable. American demand for Chinese tea, cottons, silk, lacquer ware, fans, furniture, porcelain, and other Chinese goods made the risk financially worthwhile and, in fact, highly lucrative. However, it would be tea that keeps the early trade continuously active over the sixty years. Tea was the preferred drink for all Americans and China was its major source for this important commodity. America’s trade with China was the very beginning of international trade for the U.S. Today we purchase many different types of goods from China. They cater to our particular styles and requests. The same existed in the early trade. Products were made specifically for the American market and the goods varied in cost and quality. The Chinese learned about the new American country and its people while Americans learned about the Chinese due to this continuous trade.

Philadelphia businessman, shipbuilder, banker, humanitarian, Stephen Girard, played a major role in the early trade with China. Girard was French-born, but after nine years as a sailor, he found his way to America. He then found his way to the city of Philadelphia at the beginning of the Revolutionary War. Philadelphia’s shipbuilding industry was expanding and Girard, a former sea captain who understood sailing and ships, was placing orders for the construction of an advanced fleet of ships. His ships sailed regularly to China. As a tribute to his homeland’s philosophers he named his ships Rousseau, Voltaire, Montesquieu, and Helvetius.

By 1793 Girard’s business was international and his China trade business was of major importance in making him one of the few millionaires in America. It was he who helped establish the First Bank of America in Philadelphia. Girard was so wealthy that he was able to loan the U.S. government $1.5 million during the War of 1812.

After the War of 1812, most Philadelphia merchants followed the British lead and changed their cargo to opium. Opium was the most profitable commodity and the supply and demand was constant. It was, in fact, illegal and immoral by Chinese standards to buy and sell opium. Yet, there was a never-ending demand by the Chinese, particularly when it was to be smoked. The Americans purchased opium from Turkey cheaply and then clandestinely sold it to Chinese vendors along the Pearl River, before entering the port of Canton.

Background:
In 1785, a group of six Philadelphia investors sponsored the first ship from Philadelphia to China. The ship was called the Canton, in honor of its destination, Canton, China. The ship’s captain, Thomas Truxton, was a Revolutionary War privateersman and commanding officer of the United States frigate, Constellation. The Canton made two round trip voyages to China from Philadelphia. The document in this lesson, from the Congressional record acknowledges the ship, the Canton, and Captain Thomas Truxton, as a citizen of the United States. | Context         | Thomas Jefferson, during the 1780s and 1790s, approached American military hero George Rogers Clark and French scientist Andre Michaux to undertake a scientific expedition across the continent, and he offered to finance adventurer John Ledyard’s proposal to cross North America from west to east. These plans did not mature; but once Jefferson became president in March 1801, he had the power of his office to propel his beloved project forward.

Jefferson embraced Enlightenment-era science, especially the documentation of nature based on empirical investigation. Reflecting that interest, his library at Monticello included hundreds of volumes, maps, and scientific reports on North American subjects, places, and discovered species. There was only one city in America to which Jefferson would send Lewis to prepare for his task, Philadelphia. Philadelphia had the learned men of science and medicine who could teach Lewis what he’d need to know to fulfill Jefferson’s enumerated requests. Philadelphia was the city where he could purchase all the goods he would need for the expedition.

Meriwether Lewis arrived about May 12, 1803, in Philadelphia, a city of twelve thousand dwellings inhabited by eighty-one thousand residents. Philadelphia had served as the nation’s capital from the American Revolution to 1800. No other American community possessed the concentration of learning needed to teach Captain Lewis what he must know to succeed in the vast, uncharted western wilderness.

Lewis first visited Benjamin Smith Barton (1766-1818), professor of natural history and botany at the University of Pennsylvania, also a friend of Jefferson, who tutored Lewis on how to collect, describe, and preserve plants. Barton had studied in Edinburgh, Scotland, and Gottingen, Germany, and had written the first textbook on botany in the United States, a copy of which Lewis carried throughout the expedition. Barton also loaned him his own copy of Antoine Simon Le Page DuPratz's The History of Louisiana, a book that Lewis carried across the continent and back.

Robert Patterson (1743-1824) deepened Lewis' knowledge of latitude and longitude. He was the University of Pennsylvania's vice-provost and professor of mathematics and natural philosophy, as well as the long-time secretary of the American Philosophical Society—eventually succeeding to its presidency. Patterson also taught navigation at a number of Philadelphia schools, and he enthusiastically supported the American popular museum of natural science and art that Charles Willson Peale had recently installed at Independence Hall.

Dr. Benjamin Rush (1746-1813) advised Lewis on health standards to maintain on the trail, diet, and internal cleansing, as well as the need to obtain knowledge of diseases in the west from the Indians. He had studied medicine in Edinburgh, and became a professor at the University of Pennsylvania's Institute of Medicine and Clinical Practice. His prestige had made him an authority figure during Philadelphia's yellow fever epidemic of 1793, but his total reliance on bleeding to cure fever had yielded unfavorable results. Rush's interest in human thought processes has caused him to be recognized as a forerunner of modern psychiatry, although he seems to have had no interest in Meriwether Lewis' characteristics of abnormal mental anguish.

Caspar Wistar (1761-1818), another Philadelphia intellect, alerted Lewis to the possibility of finding the remains of mastodons and other fossils. He served as vice president of the American Philosophical Society for twenty years, becoming its president when Jefferson resigned in 1815, and he published the first American textbook on anatomy. Like Rush and Barton, Wistar had studied medicine in Edinburgh, acknowledged as the center of western medical learning. He lectured at the University of Pennsylvania from the chair of anatomy and, like Rush and Barton, was a physician at Pennsylvania Hospital, America's first hospital dedicated to serving the poor, including the insane.

While in Philadelphia, Lewis purchased more than thirty-five hundred pounds of equipment for his assignment. Philadelphia was the best place to find the specialized merchandise he required. Twenty-eight Philadelphia merchants and artisan manufacturers, as well as the army's

These expenditures provided life necessities for the twenty-eight month venture: portable shelter, clothing, illumination, Indian trading goods, weapons, powder and ball, health maintenance items, emergency food, navigational and cartographic instruments, construction tools, and packing boxes. Philadelphia inventor Isaiah Lukens provided Lewis with one of his compressed air rifles, a curiosity that fascinated the Native Americans the Corps of Discovery encountered. After arranging for his two and a half tons of equipment and supplies to be carefully packed in thirty-five boxes, one hogshead, and a variety of kegs, Lewis hired a suitable wagon—probably a Conestoga and five horses through William Linnard, a military agent. The wagon driver left Philadelphia for Harpers Ferry on June 10. Lewis left Philadelphia for Washington, D.C., eight days later. The Lewis and Clark expedition had begun. |

| Context         | James Forten (1766-1842) was an abolitionist, entrepreneur, soldier with the Philadelphia militia, one of the thirty-five black men in the Second Pennsylvania Brigade of the Continental Army during the Revolutionary War, sailmaker, and one of wealthiest people in Philadelphia. He was born free, to free black parents, in Philadelphia and attended a Quaker school, the Anthony Benezet’s School, learning how to read and write, and acquiring the essence of the Quaker principles about the universality of humankind.

After his father died, Forten left school prematurely to seek employment in order to help his family. He spent several years at sea, enlisting in 1781 on the Royal Louis. Upon return to Philadelphia in 1786, Forten became an apprentice to Robert Bridges, a white sailmaker, who soon made him foreman of his shop, and by 1798 Forten owned the shop. He employed more than forty workers, black and white; Forten’s personal fortune soon grew to an estimated $100,000, one of the wealthiest men in Philadelphia.

James Forten was dedicated to the cause of racial equality. Forten joined Richard Allen in 1800 in circulating a petition calling on the U.S. Congress to emancipate slaves. During the War of 1812, he organized, with the assistance of Absalom Jones and Richard Allen, a black volunteer force of 2,500 men for the defense of Philadelphia. His efforts throughout the 1820s helped to gain important black support for the radical abolitionist movement, and he was closely associated with William Lloyd Garrison and Theodore Weld. Extremely influential with Garrison, Forten is credited with convincing the future publisher of the Liberator to call for emancipation and equality rather than colonization. In 1833 Forten helped to organize the American Antislavery Society and was active in the society until 1841, when he became ill. A supporter of the women’s suffrage movement and temperance movements, he founded, in 1839, the American Moral Reform Society, which he established for the “promotion of Education, Temperance, economy, and Universal Liberty.”

Forten married and had children who were active in the abolitionist movement, as was his granddaughter, Charlotte Forten Grimke. |

Title of Lesson | Attitudes toward Immigration through Political Cartoons
Content/Subject Area | US History, World History
Context | Since its founding, Philadelphia has been an important port for immigration. To this day, its neighborhoods hold distinct characteristics of the immigrant groups that settled there. Immigration was a contentious issue in the 19th and 20th century and today. This lesson can be used as an introduction to anti-immigration attitudes and legislation in the 19th and 20th century (quotas, literacy tests, Immigration Restriction Act, Asian Exclusion Act, Immigration Act of 1924).
Duration | 45 minutes-1 hour
Objective | SWBAT analyze various accounts of a subject told in different mediums IOT analyze attitudes toward immigration through political cartoons.

- Standard - CC.1.2.9-10.G
  Analyze various accounts of a subject told in different mediums (e.g., a person's life story in both print and multimedia), determining which details are emphasized in each account.

- Read the following excerpt from Victoria Byerly’s Hard Times Cotton Mills Girls

  “I was eleven years old when I went to work in the mill. They learnt me to knit. Well, I was so little that they had to build me a box to get up on to put the sock in the machine. I worked in the hosiery mill for a long time and, well, then we finally moved back to the country. But me and my sister Molly finally went back up there in 1910 and I went to work in the silk mill. Molly went to work in the hosiery mill. . . . We worked twelve hours a day for fifty cents. When paydays
Direct Instruction

- During the late 19th and early 20th century, Philadelphia’s was known as the “Workshop of the World” and the first great industrial city. Its production and manufacturing industries drew workers from all over the world. Its neighborhoods were characterized by mills, factories, plants, and production firms.

- According to the US Census, approximately 2 million children were working in mills, fields, factories, mines, and in the streets in 1900.

Guided Practice (and/or Cooperative Practice)

- In groups of 2-3 students view photos and descriptions of children working in mills and factories during the 19th and early 20th century and discuss their observations. What can you infer about child labor (working conditions, concerns, health, etc.) during the industrial revolution? http://www.historyplace.com/unitedstates/childlabor/

- Class discussion of students’ observations and group discussions.

- Explain that the practice of using child labor continued for several decades in England and the US. Provide students with the following quote:

  "It is a distortion of facts to say that the factories carried off the housewives from the nurseries and the kitchen and the children from their play. These women had nothing to cook with and to feed their children. These children were destitute and starving. Their only refuge was the factory. It saved them, in the strict sense of the term, from death by starvation."  Ludwig von Mises, Human Action: A Treatise on Economics

- In groups, students reflect on this quote. What is the message? What can be inferred about why child labor was prevalent?

Independent Practice

- Students respond to the following prompt: Although the practice of child labor was well-known, it continued throughout the Industrialization Era. Based on the pictures, personal account, and quote from von Mises, discuss the reasons for why this practice continued in factories and mills in the United States and England.

Pennsylvania was among the first states to enact stricter child labor laws. “A 1905 law raised the minimum age for factory and mine work to fourteen, prohibited most night work for children, and included penalties for the falsification of a child’s age. A Department of Factory Inspection was created to oversee enforcement. By 1909, the law was expanded to limit a child’s work day to ten hours and to prohibit those less than eighteen years old from working in certain industries.” (Child Labor in Pennsylvania, PENNSYLVANIA HISTORICAL AND MUSEUM COMMISSION HISTORIC PENNSYLVANIA LEAFLET No. 43)

In 1904 the National Child Labor Committee was formed to fight for federal child labor legislation. It wasn’t until 1938 when federal law regulated the employment age and workweek hours for children with the Fair Labors Standards Act.

National and International organizations have addressed child labor. In pairs, students examine the following 3 documents:

Declaration of Dependence by the Children of America in Mines and Factories and Workshops Assembled (approximately 1913)
https://www.loc.gov/resource/nclc.04892/

The League of Nations Geneva Declaration of the Rights of the Child (1924)
http://www.un-documents.net/gdrc1924.htm

The UN’s Declaration of the Rights of the Child (1959)

-Pairs compare the 3 documents. How are they similar? How are they different?

-Class discussion on similarities and differences.

-Split students into 10 groups and assign one principle in the UN Declaration of the Rights of the Child. Groups create a chart of examples and non-examples of that principle. Groups discuss if child labor is addressed in that specific principle.

Despite these declarations, child labor is still prevalent in today’s society in both “developed” and “developing” countries. Students create an 11th principal with rationale for the UN Declaration of the Rights of the Child that directly addresses child labor.

|                 | -Ask students to sketch a picture of what they think Philadelphia looked like when the first settlers arrived in the 17th century. (It might be necessary to remind students that the name “Pennsylvania” means Penn’s Woods. |
- How would this landscape/location impact daily life? What type of work/industry does it lend itself to?

- The first industry in Philadelphia was shipbuilding and remained an important industry for several centuries. Display picture of William Birch “Preparation for War”. Ask students to discuss observations.

- Based on the map, the picture they drew and the painting, ask students why they believe the shipbuilding industry became Philadelphia’s first industries.

Direct Instruction

- In the 17th and 18th centuries, wood was used for ship building. In Philadelphia, pine and oak was readily available and its location on the Delaware was beneficial to shipbuilding. By 1750 there were at least a dozen shipyards in Philadelphia. Swedish boat builders in the 1680s pioneered the trade in Philadelphia (originally New Sweden) and William Penn recruited English, Scottish, Welsh and Irish tradesman to further build the shipbuilding craft.

- Ask students how they think shipbuilding/shipyards impacted Philadelphia’s society? (Immigrants seeking jobs in ship building, trade/merchants, military/navy)

Guided Practice (and/or Cooperative Practice)

- Split students into 3 groups: Immigration, Trade, and Military/Navy. In groups, students’ research the impact the shipbuilding craft and the shipyard had on their specific focus area in Philadelphia.

  Students may be given the following sites to gather information:

- Student groups create a bulleted list on chart paper summarizing the key points in their research.

- Student groups present their research to the class. Keep chart paper posted around the room.

Independent Practice

- The shipbuilding industry in Philadelphia was founded on Sweden’s mastery of the craft.

- Students highlight the reasons why the Naval Port in Sweden was nominated and discuss as a whole class.

- Give students a copy of the UNESCO World Heritage site designation criteria (http://whc.unesco.org/en/criteria/). Discuss what criteria was presented to name the Naval Port in Sweden a World Heritage Site.
Philadelphia's Navy Yard was an important symbol of the nation's industrious, military, and trade history similar to Sweden's Naval Port of Karlskrona. Display the 1940 image of the Philadelphia Shipyard (see below).

- Students write a 1 page application for naming the Philadelphia Navy Yard as a World Heritage Site. Students are required to use at least 1 criterion from UNESCO in their application and support their rationale with current and historic information. Students should consult the chart paper from the group activity to provide supporting evidence.

become a symbol of preservation and innovation, history and modernity.

Guided Practice (and/or Cooperative Practice)

- After reading, students create and fill out a T chart with columns labeled “Historic evidence” and “Evidence of Modernity”. In the chart, they cite specific references in the article and visitors’ guide to historic elements that continue to function and exist in the navy yard and the modern aspects of the repurposed space.

- Assign an example of adaptive reuse from the list below to each pair of students. Student pairs create postcards that includes a before and after picture of each structure with a caption below describing its historic and current use. Display the postcards.

  - Hagia Sophia- Istanbul, Turkey
  - Stara Kopalnia Coal Mine- Poland
  - Boekhandel Selexyz Dominicanen- Netherlands
  - The Attendant (Coffee house)- London

  - Vienna’s Gasometers- Vienna, Austria
  - Powerstation of Art- Shanghai, China
  - Ghost Train Park- Lima, Peru
  - Cheonggyecheon Restoration Project.- Seoul, South Korea

Independent Practice

- Students choose a building their neighborhood that they believe needs to be repurposed in order to better serve their community. Students take or draw a before picture and sketch their adaptive reuse.

- Students write a description of the building in its current state and why they chose it. They describe the adaptive reuse and how it would benefit their community.
